dark (därk) adj. 1 Lacking light. 2 Of a deep shade; black, or approaching black. 3 Obscure; mysterious; not understandable. 4 Gloomy; disheartening. 5 Unenlightened. 6 Atrocious; dastardly; wicked. 7 Of brunette complexion. 8 Blind; unknowing. 9 Secretive; reticent. — n. 1 Lack of light. 2 A place, position, or state where there is little or no light. 3 Night. 4 Obscurity; secrecy. 5 Ignorance: especially in the phrase in the dark. 6 A heavy shade or shadow in a drawing or painting. — v.t. & v.i. Obs. To make or become dark; darken. [OE deorc]

Synonyms (adj.): black, dim, dismal, dusky, gloomy, murky, mysterious, obscure, opaque, sable, shadowy, shady, somber, swart, swarthy. Strictly, that which is black is absolutely destitute of color; that which is dark is absolutely destitute of light. In common speech, however, a coat is black, though not optically colorless; the night is dark, though the stars shine. That is obscure, shadowy, or shady from which the light is more or less cut off. Dusky is applied to objects which appear as if viewed in fading light; the word is often used, as are swart and swarthy, of the human skin when quite dark, or even verging on black. Dim refers to imperfection of outline, from distance, darkness, mist, etc., or from some defect of vision. Opaque objects are impervious to light. Murky is said of that which is at once dark, obscure, and gloomy; as, a murky den; a murky sky. Figuratively, dark is emblematic of sadness, agreeing with somber, dismal, gloomy, also of moral evil:

as, a dark deed. Of intellectual matters, dark is now rarely used in the old sense of a dark saying, etc. See MYSTERIOUS, OBSCURE. Antonyms: bright, brilliant, clear, crystalline, dazzling, gleaming, glowing, illumined, light, lucid, luminous, radiant, shining, transparent, white. Compare synonyms for LIGHT.

Synonyms: craft, cunning, deceit, deceitfulness, delusion, dissimulation, double-dealing, duplicity, fabrication, falsehood, finesse, fraud, guile, hypocrisy, imposition, lie, lying, prevarication, trickery, untruth. Deceit is especially applied to the habit, deception to the act; guile applies to the disposition out of which deceit and deception grow, and also to their actual practice. A lie, lying, or falsehood is the uttering of what one knows to be false with intent to deceive. Untruth is more than lack of accuracy, implying always lack of veracity; but it is a somewhat milder and more dignified word than lie. Falsehood and lying are in utterance; deceit and deception may be merely in act or implication. Deception may be innocent, and even unintentional, as in the case of an optical illusion; deceit always involves injurious intent. Craft and cunning have not necessarily any moral quality; they are common traits of animals, but stand rather low in the human scale. Duplicity is the habitual speaking or acting with intent to appear to mean what one does not. Dissimulation is rather a concealing of what is than a pretense of what is not. Finesse is simply an adroit and delicate management of a matter for one's own side, not necessarily involving deceit. Compare FRAUD. LIE. Antonyms: candor, frankness, guilelessness, honesty, openness, simplicity, sincerity, truth, veracity.
de·cep·tive (di·sep′tiv) adj. Having power or tendency to deceive. — de·cep′tive·ly adv. — de·cep′tive·ness n.
Synonyms: deceitful, delusive, illusive, illusory. Persons are deceitful: things are deceptive. We speak of a deceitful, but not of a deceptive man. We speak, however, of deceitful promises, as involving personal intent to deceive. It is more accurate to say deceptive than deceitful appearances. See BAD, COUNTERFEIT. Antonyms: fair, frank, genuine, honest.

doubt (dout) v.t. 1 To hesitate to accept as true; hold as uncertain; disbelieve. 2 Obs. To be apprehensive of; fear. — v.i. 3 To be in doubt; be uncertain. 4 To be mistrustful. — n. 1 Lack of certain knowledge; uncertainty regarding the truth or reality of something. 2 A matter or case of dubitation; indecision. 3 A question requiring settlement, an objection. 4 Obs. Fear; dread. [<OF duter, douter <L dubitare; spelling refashioned after L] — doubt'a·ble adj. — doubt'er n.

Synonyms (verb): distrust, mistrust, surmise, suspect. To doubt is to lack conviction. Incompleteness of evidence may compel one to doubt, or some perverse bias of mind may so incline him. Distrust may express simply a lack of confidence. Mistrust and suspect imply that one is almost assured of positive evil; one may distrust himself or others; he suspects others. Mistrust is rarely used of persons, but only of motives, intentions, etc. Distrust is always serious: mistrust is often used playfully. Compare DOUBT n., QUESTION, SUPPOSE. Antonyms: believe, trust.

Synonyms (noun): disbelief, distrust, hesitancy, hesitation, incredulity, indecision, irresolution, misgiving, perplexity, question, scruple, suspense, suspicion, uncertainty. Doubt is lack of conviction; disbelief is conviction to the contrary; unbelief refers to a settled state of mind. Perplexity seeks a solution; doubt may be content to linger unresolved. Any improbable statement awakens incredulity. As regards practical matters, uncertainty applies to the unknown or undecided; doubt implies some negative evidence. Suspense regards the future, and is eager and anxious; uncertainty may relate to any period, and be quite indifferent. Misgiving is ordinarily in regard to the outcome of something already done or decided; hesitation, indecision, and irresolution have reference to something that remains to be decided or done and are due oftener to infirmity of will than to lack of knowledge. Distrust and suspicion apply especially to the motives, character, etc., of others, and are more decidedly adverse than doubt. Scruple relates to matters of conscience and duty. See PERPLEXITY, QUESTION. Antonyms: assurance, belief, certainty, confidence, conviction, decision, determination, persuasion, reliance, resolution, resolve, trust.

See synonyms under WAY. [OE drīfan]

Synonyms (verb): compel, impel, propel, push, repel, repulse, resist, ride, thrust. To drive is to move an object with some force or violence before or away from oneself; it is the direct reverse of draw, lead, etc. A man leads a horse by the halter, drives him with whip and rein. One may be driven to a thing or from it; hence, drive is a synonym equally for compel or for repel or repulse. Repulse is stronger and more conclusive than repel; one may be repelled by the very aspect of the person whose favor he seeks, but is not repulsed except by the direct refusal or ignoring of his suit. It is common to speak of driving in a car, riding upon a horse; though many good authorities use ride in the older and broader sense as signifying to be supported and borne along by any means of conveyance. Compare ACTUATE, BANISH, COMPEL, INFLUENCE, PUSH. Antonyms: see synonyms for DRAW.

ef·front·er·y (i·frun'tər·ē) n. pl. ·er·ies Insolent assurance; audacity; impudence. [<F effronterie <OF esfront shameless <L effrons < ex- out + frons, frontis forehead, face]

Synonyms: assurance, audacity, boldness, brass, hardihood, impudence, insolence, shamelessness. Audacity, in the sense here considered, is a reckless defiance of law, decency, public opinion, or personal rights, claims, or views, approaching the meaning of impudence or shamelessness, but always carrying the thought of the personal risk that one disregards in such defiance; the merely impudent or shameless person may take no thought of consequences; the audacious person recognizes and recklessly braves them. Hardihood defies and disregards the rational judgment of men. Effrontery (L effrons bare-faced, shameless) adds to audacity and hardihood the special element of defiance of considerations of propriety, duty, and respect for others, yet not to the extent implied in impudence or shamelessness. Impudence disregards what is due to superiors: shamelessness defies decency. Boldness is forward-stepping courage, spoken of with reference to the presence and observation of others; boldness, in the good sense, is courage viewed from the outside; but the word is frequently used in an unfavorable sense to indicate a lack of proper sensitiveness and modesty. Compare ASSURANCE, BRAVE, IMPUDENCE. Antonyms: bashfulness, coyness, diffidence, modesty, sensitiveness, shrinking, shyness, timidity.

ef·fulge (i·fulj') v.t. & v.i. ·fulged, ·fulg·ing To shine forth; radiate. [<L effulgere < ex- out + fulgere shine]

e·lab·o·rate (i·lab'ə·rāt) v. ·rat·ed, ·rat·ing v.t. 1 To create and work out with care and in detail: to elaborate a system. 2 To produce by labor; make. —v.i. 3 To speak or write so as to embellish a matter, subject, etc., with additional details; be more specific: with on or upon. —adj. (-ər·it) Developed in detail with care or painstaking; carefully wrought out; done with thoroughness or exactness. [< L elaboratus, pp. of elaborare < e- out + laborare work] —e·lab'o·rate·ly adv. —e·lab'o·rate·ness n. —e·lab'o·ra'tion n. —e·lab'o·ra'tive adj. —e·lab'o·ra'tor n.

e·lae·o·lite (i·lē'ə·līt) n. A coarsely crystallized or massive opaque variety of nephelite with a resinous luster: also spelled eleolite. [< Gk. elaion oil + -LITE] el·ae·op·tene (el'ē·op'tēn) n. Chem. The liquid hydrocarbon or terpene constituent of an essential oil: distinguished from stearoptene. [< Gk. elaion oil + ptenos flying]

El·a·gab·a·lus (el'ə·gab'ə·ləs) See HELIOGABALUS.

e·la·in (i·lā'ən) See OLEIN.

E·laine (i·lān') A feminine personal name. [See HELEN] —Elaine In Arthurian legend, any of several ladies; especially, the mother of Sir Galahad.

elaio- combining form Oil: elaioplast. Also elaeo-. [< Gk. elaion olive oil] el·ai·o·plast (el'ē·ō·plast) n. Bot. One of the highly refractive oil-secreting protoplasmic granules found near the nuclei of plant cells: also spelled eleoplast.

E·lam (ē'ləm) An ancient country of SW Asia between the Persian Gulf and the Caspian Sea. Gen. x 22: also Susiana.

E·lam·ite (ē'ləm·īt) n. 1 One of the ancient inhabitants of Elam. 2 An extinct, unrelated, agglutinative language, or group of languages, spoken in Elam: also E·lam·it·ic (ē'ləm·it'ik): also called Susian. —adj. Of or pertaining to Elam, its inhabitants or their language: also E·lam·it'ic, E·lam·it'ish (-i'tish).

é·lan (ā·läN') n. Ardor; dash; vivacity. [< F < élancer < é- out + lancer dart, throw]

e·land (ē'lənd) n. A large oxlike African antelope with twisted horns (genus Taurotragus); especially; the common eland (T. oryx), of SE Africa. [< Du., elk] élan vi·tal (vē·tál') French Literally, life force; vital energy; in Bergson's philosophy, the creative life impulse of all evolution. Compare VITALISM.

el·a·phine (el'ə·fīn, -fin) adj. 1 Of or pertaining to a genus (Elaphodus) of deer native in China. 2 Describing the antlers characteristic of this genus. [< L elaphus < Gk, elaphos a stag] el·a·pine (el'ə·pin, -pin) adj. Zool. Of or pertaining to a subfamily (Elipinae) of tropical snakes, including many of the most venomous species, as the coral snake, cobra, and harlequin snake. [< NL < Gk. elaps, var. of ellops, a kind of serpent]

e·lapse (i·laps') v.i. e·lapsed, e·laps·ing To slip by; pass away: said of time. [< L elapsus, pp. of elabi < e- out, away + labi glide]

El A·raish (el ä·rīsh') The Arabic name for LARACHE.

e·las·mo·branch (i·las'mō·brangk, i·laz'-) n. Any of a subclass (Elasmobranchii) of fishes having cartilaginous skeletons and lamellate gills, including sharks and rays. —adj. Pertaining to or belonging to the subclass Elasmobranchii. [< NL < Gk. elasmos metal plate + branchia gills]

e·las·tance (i·las'təns) n. Electr. The reciprocal of capacitance. [< ELAST(ICITY) + -ANCE]

e·las·tic (i·las'tik) adj. 1 Spontaneously returning to a former size, shape, or configuration after being altered from it; springy; accommodating. 2 Capable of quick recovery, as from misfortune or depression; buoyant. 3 Increasing or diminishing readily in response to a changing stimulus, demand, or other causative influence: an elastic price, one that soars or drops quickly owing to sudden variations in demand. 4 Capable of expansion and contraction, as a gas; flexible. —n. A strip, cord, or piece of india rubber or of webbing made elastic by india-rubber threads woven therein, used as a band, suspender, etc.; specifically, a garter. [< NL elasticus < Gk. elastikos driving, propulsive < elaunein drive] —e·las'ti·cal·ly adv.

e·las·tic·i·ty (i·las'tis'ə·tē, ē'las-) n. 1 Physics That property of matter by virtue of which a body tends to resist deformation, returning to a former or normal size, shape, or configuration, after being deflected, compressed, expanded, twisted or drawn. 2 The rebounding quality of bodies; resilience; springiness: the elasticity of the air. 3 The tendency to recover from depression or misfortune; buoyancy.

e·las·tin (i·las'tin) n. Biochem. The protein substance, of high glycine and leucine content, which is found in tendons, cartilage, connective tissue, and bone.

e·las·to·mer (i·las'tə·mər) n. Chem. One of a class of polymerized compounds characterized by elastic, rubberlike properties, as the synthetic rubbers and various plastics. [< ELAST(IC) + -o- + Gk. meros part] e·late (i·lāt') v.t. ·lat·ed, ·lat·ing To raise the spirits of; excite. —adj. Exalted or triumphant; exultant. [< L elatus, pp. for efferre < ex- out + ferre bear] —e·lat'ed adj. —e·lat'ed·ly adv. —e·lat'ed·ness n.

El·a·te·a (el'ə·tē'ə) An ancient city of Phocis, Greece.

el·a·ter (el'ə·tər) n. 1 Entomol. a A click beetle or elaterid. b A spring or terminal bristlelike abdominal appendage of a springtail or podurid insect. 2 Bot. a In the horsetail family of plants (Equisetaceae), one of the four club-shaped membranous bands attached at a single point on a spore formed by the splitting of the outer coat. b A sterile, elastic, spirally twisted filament for the dispersion of spores, as in liverworts, puffballs, and slime molds. [< NL < Gk. elatēr < elaunein drive]

e·lat·er·id (i·lat'ər·id) adj. Of or pertaining to a family (Elateridae) of beetles with serrate antennae, including the click beetles or snapping beetles. —n. An elaterid beetle. [< NL < Gk. elatēr. See ELATER.]

e·lat·er·in (i·lat'ər·in) n. Chem. A bitter crystalline compound, $C_{20}H_{28}O_5$, contained in elaterium and having a powerful cathartic effect. [< ELATER(IUM) + -IN] e·lat·er·ite (i·lat'ə·rīt) n. An elastic, resinous, dark-brown, subtranslucent mineral hydrocarbon, found in soft masses. [< obs. elater elasticity (< Gk. < elaunein drive) + -ITE[1]] el·a·te·ri·um (el'ə·tir'ē·əm) n. 1 The squirting cucumber (Ecballium elaterium). 2 A purgative derived from its juice. 3 A greenish to gray strongly cathartic substance contained in the juice of the fruit of the squirting cucumber. [< L < Gk. elatērion a purgative < elaunein drive]

E·lath (ē'lath) 1 A port at the southern extremity of Israel on the Gulf of Aqaba. 2 The ancient name for AQABA.

e·la·tion (i·lā'shən) n. Exalted feeling, as from pride or joy; exultation.

E·lay·er (ē'lā'ər) n. The Heaviside layer.

El·ba (el'bə) The largest island of the Tuscan Archipelago; 86 square miles; a sovereign principality under the exiled Napoleon I, 1814–15.

El·be (el'bə) A river of central Europe, flowing 691 miles NW to the North Sea near Hamburg. Czechoslovakian La·be (la'be).

El Be·kaa (el bē·kä') Bekaa. Also El Bi·ka', El Bi·qa'.

El·ber·feld (el'bər·felt) See WUPPERTAL.

El·bert (el'bərt) A masculine personal name. Also Lat. El·ber·tus (el·bûr'təs).

Elbert, Mount A peak in central Colorado, highest in the United States Rockies; 14,431 feet.

El·bing (el'bing) A port in northern Poland on the Vistula estuary. Polish El'blag (el'blôngk).

el·bow (el'bō) n. 1 The joint at the bend of the arm; also, the joint resembling an elbow in the shoulder or hock of a quadruped. Compare illustration under HORSE. 2 Any outward bend resembling an elbow, as a short angular pipe fitting, or a projection on the side of a chair or sofa on which to rest the arm. —v.t. 1 To push or jostle with or as with the elbows. 2 To make (one's way) by such pushing. —v.i. 3 To make one's way by pushing or jostling. [OE elboga] elbow grease Colloq. Steady application; hard work.

elbow room Ample room; scope for activity or occupation.

El·brus (el'bro͝os) A peak in the Caucasus Mountains in NW Georgian S.S.R. and the highest peak in Europe; 18,481 feet.

el·buck (el'buk) n. Scot. Elbow.

El·burz (el·bo͝orz') A mountain range in northern Iran; highest peak, 18,603 feet.

El Ca·ney (el kä·nā') A town in east Cuba; scene of an American victory over Cuban forces (1898) in the Spanish-American War: also Caney.

El Cap·i·tan (el kap·i·tan') A peak in the Yosemite Valley, California; 7,564 feet.

El·che (el'chā) A city in eastern Spain.

eld (eld) n. Archaic Old times; antiquity; old age. [OE eldo old age] el·der[1] (el'dər) n. 1 A shrub (genus Sambucus) of the honeysuckle family, with white flowers and purple-black or red berries; the roots of some species contain a very poisonous alkaloid, but the flowers and berries are often used in medicine. 2 Any one of various trees or plants resembling elder: the poison elder (Rhus vernix). [OE ellærn] eld·er[2] (el'dər) adj. 1 Having lived longer; earlier born. 2 Senior: alternative comparative of old. 3 Earlier in time. 4 Prior in rank. —n. 1 A prince or head of a tribe or family. 2 A church officer or minister. 3 An older or aged person. 4 An ancestor. [OE eldra] —eld'er·ship n.

el·der·ber·ry (el'dər·ber'ē, -bər·ē) n. pl. ·ber·ries The drupe of the common elder.

eld·er·ly (el'dər·lē) adj. Somewhat old; approaching old age.

eld·est (el'dist) adj. First-born; oldest; superlative of OLD. See ELDER².

eldest hand The first player in a card game; the player on the dealer's left; in poker, the age: opposed to younger hand.

el·ding (el'ding) n. Scot. Firewood; fuel.

El Do·ra·do (el də·rä'dō) 1 A legendary South American realm rich in gold and jewels: the object of the early Spanish conquerors and of many European explorers. 2 Any region of the western United States conceived of as promising wealth and opportunity to the adventurous, particularly California during and after the gold rush of 1848–49. 3 Any region rich in gold or opportunity. 4 A golden opportunity. Also El'do·ra'do.

E·le·a (ē'lē·ə) An ancient town in Lucania, Italy, where the Eleatic school of philosophy was founded.

El·ea·nor (el'ə·nər, -nôr) A feminine personal name. Also Lat. El·e·a·no·ra (el'ē·ə·nôr'ə, -nō'rə), Dan., Ger. E·le·o·no·re (ā·lā'ə·nō'rə), Ital. E·le·o·no·ra (ā·lā'ə·nō'rä). [See HELEN] —Eleanor of Aquitaine, 1122–1204, divorced wife of Louis VII of France; married Henry II of England: also Eleanor of Guienne. —Eleanor of Castile, died 1290, wife of Edward I of England. —Eleanor of Provence, died 1291, wife of Henry III of England.

El·e·at·ic (el'ē·at'ik) adj. Pertaining to or characteristic of Elea or the school of philosophy founded there by Xenophanes and Parmenides. —n. 1 A native of Elea. 2 A disciple of the Eleatic school of philosophy, which developed the conception of the universal unity of being. [< L Eleaticus < Elea ELEA] —El'e·at'i·cism n.

El·e·a·zar (el'ē·ā'zər, Du. ā'lā·ä'zär) A masculine personal name. Also El'e·a'zer, Fr., É·lé·a·zar (ā·lā·ä·zär'), Ital. E·le·a·za·ro (ā·lā·äd'zä·rō), Sp. E·le·á·za·ro (ā'lā·ä'thä·rō). [< Hebrew, God's help, or God is helper] el·e·cam·pane (el'i·kam·pān') n. 1 A tall perennial herb of the composite family (Inula helenium), having large leaves, yellow flowers, and a mucilaginous root yielding a tonic. 2 A coarse candy flavored with an extract made from the root of this herb. [< Med. L enula elecampane + campana of the field] a e·lect (i·lekt') v.t. 1 To choose for an office by vote. 2 To take by choice or selection. 3 Theol. To choose or set aside for eternal life. —v.i. 4 To make a choice. —adj. 1 Elected to office, but not yet in charge: used as the second element in compounds, as president-elect. 2 Theol. Chosen of God for salvation; of saintly or divine character. 3 Selected; chosen; picked out. —n. 1 Theol. A person, or body of persons, chosen of God for salvation or for special service. 2 One who is favored or preferred. [< L electus, pp. of eligere < ex- out + legere choose] e·lec·tion (i·lek'shən) n. 1 The selecting of a person or persons for office, as by ballot. 2 A popular vote on any question. 3 A choice, as between alternatives; choice in general. 4 In Calvinism, the predestination of some individuals to be saved from God's wrath and punishment. See synonyms under ALTERNATIVE.

e·lec·tion·eer (i·lek'shən·ir') v.i. 1 To endeavor to win an election. 2 To canvass for votes.

e·lec·tive (i·lek'tiv) adj. 1 Of or pertaining to a choice by vote. 2 Obtained or bestowed by election. 3 Exerting the privilege of choice. 4 Subject to choice; optional. 5 Chem. Having a tendency to attract and combine with some substances and not with others: elective absorption. —n. An optional study in a fixed college curriculum. —e·lec'·tive·ly adv. —e·lec'tive·ness n.

e·lec·tor (i·lek'tər) n. 1 One who elects; a person qualified to vote at an election. 2 U.S. A presidential elector. 3 One of the great princes who formerly (12th to 18th century) had the right of electing the Holy Roman Emperor. —presidential electors The persons chosen by the several States and the District of Columbia to elect the president and vice president of the United States. The District of Columbia has three electors; each State sends a number equal to its total of senators and representatives.

e·lec·tor·al (i·lek'tər·əl) adj. Pertaining to, of, or comprising electors.

electoral college The whole corporate body of the presidential electors chosen at one election, although they never meet as a body; also, those of a single State, which do meet: a popular, unofficial term, first used informally in 1821.

e·lec·tor·ate (i·lek'tər·it) n. 1 Those who elect; the mass of voters. 2 The rank or territory of an elector in the Holy Roman Empire.

e·lec·tor·ess (i·lek'tər·is) n. 1 A woman qualified to vote at an election. 2 The wife or widow of an elector of the Holy Roman Empire. Also e·lec'tress (-tris).

E·lec·tra (i·lek'trə) 1 In Greek legend, a daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra who persuaded her brother Orestes to kill their mother and their mother's lover Aegisthus to avenge their father's murder. 2 One of the Pleiades. Also Elektra.

Electra complex Psychoanal. A compulsive, strongly repressed sexual attachment of the daughter to her father: the female analog of the Oedipus complex.

e·lec·tret (i·lek'trit) n. A dielectric, usually rod-shaped, which may be strongly charged with positive electricity at one pole and with negative electricity at the other: it is the electrical analog of the magnet. [< ELECTR(ICITY) + (MAGN)ET] e·lec·tric (i·lek'trik) adj. 1 Relating to, derived from, produced, or operated by electricity. 2 Containing, producing, or carrying electricity. 3 Spirited; magnetic; thrilling. Also e·lec'tri·cal. —n. 1 A street car, train, or other vehicle run by electricity. 2 Any substance or material, as amber or resin, which can be given an electric charge by rubbing. [< NL electricus < L electrum amber < Gk. ēlektron] —e·lec'tri·cal·ly adv.

electrical transcription See under TRANSCRIPTION (def. 3).

electric breeze 1 A stream of ions repelled from an electrified point. 2 A brush discharge as used in therapeutics.

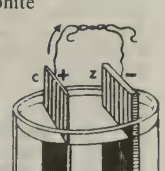
electric calamine Hemimorphite electric cell Any of a large variety of devices consisting of two dissimilar metals or materials immersed in an electrolyte, capable of generating an electric charge by chemical action.



ELECTRIC CELL
c. Carbon (positive pole).
z. Zinc (negative pole).

electric chair 1 A chair used for electrocuting criminals by sending a high voltage of electricity through the body of the person fastened into it. 2 Hence, the death penalty.

electric clock Any of variously designed clocks which are actuated by electricity in any way; especially, a clock operated by plugging in on an alternating current transmitting electromagnetic impulses from a master clock.

electric current A stream of electrons flowing through a conducting body; it is usually measured and expressed in terms of amperes, coulombs, and volts. See ELECTRON.

electric displacement The theoretical movement of the electricity in a dielectric as a result of changes in the electric field where the latter is located.

electric eel A cyprinoid, eel-like fish (Electrophorus electricus) of tropical America, which sometimes reaches a length of six feet, carrying in its tail organs capable of delivering powerful electric shocks.

electric energy The capacity possessed by electricity for doing work.

electric eye A photoelectric cell.

electric field A field of force surrounding a charged object or a moving magnet.

electric fish Any fish having organs capable of imparting an electric shock.

electric furnace 1 A furnace in which high temperatures are obtained by the use of an electric arc or by induction from a central power station. 2 A smelting furnace in which the heat is produced by an electric current.

e·lec·tri·cian (i·lek'trish'ən, ē'lek-) n. 1 One versed in the science of electricity. 2 An inventor, maker, or repairer of electrical apparatus.

e·lec·tric·i·ty (i·lek'tris'ə·tē, ē'lek-) n. 1 A fundamental property of matter, associated with atomic particles whose movements, free or controlled, lead to the development of fields of force and the generation of kinetic or potential energy. The electron is the basic unit of negative electricity, and the proton of positive electricity. Any accumulation of one kind of electricity in excess of an equivalent of the opposite kind is called a charge and is measured in appropriate units. A charge fixed at one point or within a circumscribed field of force, as a Leyden jar, is static electricity; a charge which flows through a conductor is current electricity. 2 The property of many substances, as amber, fur, glass, etc., mutually to attract or repel each other when subjected to friction. 3 The science which deals with the phenomena, laws, theory, and application of this property.

electric light 1 Illumination produced by electricity. 2 The lamp, tower, or other device used for electric illumination, especially the bulb.

electric machine 1 An apparatus for generating static electricity, as by friction. 2 A dynamo.

electric motor A machine for transforming electric energy into mechanical power: distinguished from dynamo.

electric ray Any of a family (Torpedinidae) of rays with usually round bodies and short tails having an organ in each winglike fin that delivers an electric shock as a means of stunning prey or of defense against predators. Also called crampfish, numbfish, torpedo.

e·lec·tri·fy (i·lek'trə·fī) v.t. ·fied, ·fy·ing 1 To act upon, charge with, or subject to electricity. 2 To equip, as a house, for the use of electricity. 3 To adapt for operation by electric power, as a railroad. 4 To arouse; startle; thrill. —e·lec'tri·fi'a·ble adj. —e·lec'tri·fi·ca'·tion n. —e·lec'tri·fi'er n.

e·lec·trine (i·lek'trin) adj. 1 Made of electrum. 2 Made of or related to amber. —n. An imaginary substance, supposed by some to be the basis of electricity. [< Gk. ēlektrinos < ēlektron amber] e·lec·trize (i·lek'trīz) v.t. ·trized, ·triz·ing To electrify. —e·lec'tri·za'tion n.

e·lec·triz·er (i·lek'trī·zər) n. One who or that which electrizes.

e·lec·tro (i·lek'trō) n. pl. ·tros 1 An electrotype. 2 Electroplating. —v.t. ·troed, ·tro·ing To make an electrotype of; electroplate. [Short for ELECTROTYPE] electro- combining form 1 Electric; by, with, or of electricity: electrocardiogram. 2 Electrolytic: electroanalysis. Also, before vowels, sometimes electr-. [< Gk. ēlektron amber] e·lec·tro·a·cous·tics (i·lek'trō·ə·kōō'stiks) n. The branch of acoustics which studies the design, operation, and efficiency of equipment used in the electrical and electronic transmission of sound, as microphones, loudspeakers, soundtrack apparatus, tape-recorders, etc. —e·lec'tro·a·cous'tic adj.

e·lec·tro·a·nal·y·sis (i·lek'trō·ə·nal'ə·sis) n. An analysis by and in accordance with the methods of electrolysis.

e·lec·tro·bi·ol·o·gy (i·lek'trō·bī·ol'ə·jē) n. The study of electrical phenomena associated with the functioning and behavior of living organisms.

e·lec·tro·bi·os·co·py (i·lek'trō·bī·os'kə·pē) n. The determination of the presence of absence of life in an organism by means of suitably applied electric currents. —e·lec'tro·bi'o·scop'·ic (-bī'ə·skop'ik) adj.

e·lec·tro·cap·il·lar·i·ty (i·lek'trō·kap'i·lar'ə·tē) n. That change in the surface tension between two conducting liquids in contact which occurs when an electric current is passed between them.

e·lec·tro·car·di·o·gram (i·lek'trō·kär'dē·ə·gram') n. Med. A graph indicating electromotive variations in the action of the heart.

e·lec·tro·car·di·o·graph (i·lek'trō·kä'dē·ə·graf', -gräf') n. Med. An instrument for recording the electric current produced by the action of the heart muscle: used in the diagnosis of diseases affecting the heart. —e·lec·tro·car·di·og·ra·phy (i·lek′trō·kär′dē·og′rə·fē) n.

e·lec·tro·chem·is·try (i·lek′trō·kem′is·trē) n. The branch of chemistry that treats of electricity as active in effecting chemical change. —e·lec′tro·chem′i·cal adj. —e·lec′tro·chem′i·cal·ly adv. —e·lec′tro·chem′ist n.

e·lec·tro·co·ag·u·la·tion (i·lek′trō·kō·ag′yə·lā′shən) n. The destructive coagulation of protoplasmic material or of living tissue, healthy or morbid, by the passage through it of an electric current.

e·lec·tro·co·ma (i·lek′trō·kō′mə) n. Coma induced by electroshock therapy.

e·lec·tro·cul·ture (i·lek′trō·kul′chər) n. The stimulation of the growth, development, and maturing of plants by electrical means, especially by static electricity and fields of force in the atmosphere.

e·lec·tro·cute (i·lek′trə·kyōōt) v.t. ·cut·ed, ·cut·ing 1 To execute in the electric chair. 2 To kill by electricity. [< ELECTRO- + (EXE)CUTE] —e·lec′tro·cu′tion n.

e·lec·trode (i·lek′trōd) n. Electr. Either of the two conducting elements through which a current leaves or enters an electrolytic cell, vacuum tube, electric arc or furnace, or any non-metallic conductor; an anode or cathode. Compare illustration under ELECTRIC CELL. [< ELECTR(O) + -ODE¹]

e·lec·tro·de·pos·it (i·lek′trō·di·poz′it) v.t. To deposit chemically, as metal from a solution, by means of an electric current. —n. That which is so deposited. —e·lec′tro·dep′o·si′tion (-dep′ə·zish′ən, -dē′pə-) n.

e·lec·tro·des·ic·ca·tion (i·lek′trō·des′ə·kā′shən) n. The destruction of animal tissues by means of controlled high-frequency electric-spark discharges: also called fulguration.

e·lec·tro·dy·nam·ic (i·lek′trō·dī·nam′ik) adj. Relating to the forces of attraction and repulsion produced by electric currents. —e·lec′tro·dy·nam′i·cal·ly adv.

e·lec·tro·dy·nam·ics (i·lek′trō·dī·nam′iks) n. The branch of physics which deals with the forces of electrical attraction and repulsion and with the energy transformations of magnetic fields and electric currents.

e·lec·tro·dy·na·mom·e·ter (i·lek′trō·dī′nə·mom′ə·tər) n. An instrument for measuring electrical current, voltage, or power, in which the deflecting force arises from the interaction of two wire coils carrying currents.

e·lec·tro·en·ceph·a·lo·gram (i·lek′trō·en·sef′ə·lə·gram′) n. A record of electrical impulses and changes in the brain: important in the diagnosis of certain diseases, as epilepsy. —e·lec′tro·en·ceph′a·lo·graph′ (-graf′, -gräf′) n.

e·lec·tro·en·ceph·a·log·ra·phy (i·lek′trō·en·sef′ə·log′rə·fē) n. 1 The art and technique of recording electrical changes in the brain. 2 The science of interpreting these changes in the diagnosis of epilepsy and other incapacitating brain diseases.

e·lec·tro·en·dos·mo·sis (i·lek′trō·en′dos·mō′sis) n. The diffusion of fluids through permeable membranes or diaphragms by the application of an electrical potential.

e·lec·tro·form (i·lek′trō·fôrm′) v.t. To produce (shaped objects) by the electrolytic deposition of metal upon a mold.

e·lec·tro·form·ing (i·lek′trō·fôr′ming) n. The production of metal tubing, medals, and the like by the electrolytic deposition of metal upon a mold of the desired shape or pattern.

e·lec·tro·gas·tro·gram (i·lek′trō·gas′trə·gram) n. Med. The record of an electrogastrograph.

e·lec·tro·gas·tro·graph (i·lek′trō·gas′trə·graf, -gräf) n. Med. A device for indicating electrical changes caused by muscular contractions of the stomach.

e·lec·tro·graph (i·lek′trō·graf, -gräf) n. 1 The linear record of an electrometer. 2 An apparatus for tracing a design to be etched for use in printing wallpaper, calico, etc. 3 A roentgenogram. —e·lec′tro·graph′ic adj. —e·lec·trog·ra·phy (i·lek′trog′rə·fē, ē′lek-) n.

e·lec·tro·ki·net·ic (i·lek′trō·ki·net′ik) adj. Pertaining to or caused by electricity in motion.

e·lec·tro·ki·net·ics (i·lek′trō·ki·net′iks) n. That branch of electrical science which treats of the motion of electricity and the forces producing or regulating it: opposed to electrostatics.

e·lec·tro·ky·mo·gram (i·lek′trō·kī′mə·gram) n. The record made by an electrokymograph.

e·lec·tro·ky·mo·graph (i·lek′trō·kī′mə·graf, -gräf) n. Med. An instrument for measuring the action of the heart by means of X-rays which project the heart shadow upon a fluorescent screen used in conjunction with a photocell.

e·lec·tro·lier (i·lek′trə·lir′) n. A fixture, usually ornamental, for holding electric lamps. [< ELECTRO- + (CHANDE)LIER]

e·lec·tro·lu·mi·nes·cence (i·lek′trō·lōō′mə·nes′əns) n. 1 Light produced by the agency of electricity. 2 The emission of a soft, uniformly diffused light from phosphor powders embedded in the surface of a panel of glass or other insulating material which is directly subjected to the action of an alternating electric field. —e·lec′tro·lu′mi·nes′cent adj.

e·lec·trol·y·sis (i·lek′trol′ə·sis) n. 1 The decomposing of a chemical compound by passing an electric current through it. 2 The use of an electrified needle to destroy the roots of unwanted body hair. [< ELECTRO- + -LYSIS]

e·lec·tro·lyte (i·lek′trə·līt) n. 1 A substance, usually in solution, which will transmit an electric current by the formation of ions. 2 A solution which conducts an electric current between the electrodes of a cell, accompanied by the release of a gas or the deposition of a solid. [< ELECTRO- + Gk. lytos loosed < luein loosen] —e·lec·tro·lyt·ic (i·lek′trə·lit′ik) or ·i·cal adj. —e·lec′tro·lyt′i·cal·ly adv.

e·lec·tro·lyze (i·lek′trə·līz) v.t. ·lyzed, ·lyz·ing To decompose by electric current. —e·lec·tro·ly·za′tion n. —e·lec′tro·lyz′er n.

e·lec·tro·mag·net (i·lek′trō·mag′nit) n. A core of soft iron or the like, which temporarily becomes a magnet during the passage of an electric current through a coil of wire surrounding it. —e·lec′tro·mag·net′ic (-mag·net′ik) or ·i·cal adj. —e·lec′tro·mag·net′i·cal·ly adv.

e·lec·tro·mag·net·ism (i·lek′trō·mag′nə·tiz′əm) n. 1 Magnetism developed by electricity. 2 That science which treats of the relations between electricity and magnetism and the phenomena due to these relations. Also e·lec′tro·mag·net′ics.

e·lec·tro·met·al·lur·gy (i·lek′trō·met′ə·lûr′jē, -mə·tal′ər·jē) n. The art or science of electrolytically depositing metals, or of separating them from their ores or alloys by electrolysis or the electric furnace. —e·lec′tro·met′al·lur′gi·cal adj.

e·lec·trom·e·ter (i·lek′trom′ə·tər, ē′lek-) n. An instrument for measuring the voltage in an electric circuit by the electrostatic forces exerted between two charged bodies.

e·lec·trom·e·try (i·lek′trom′ə·trē, ē′lek-) n. The science or art of making electrical measurements. —e·lec·tro·met·ric (i·lek′trō·met′rik) or ·ri·cal adj.

e·lec·tro·mo·tion (i·lek′trə·mō′shən) n. 1 The passage of an electric current in a voltaic circuit. 2 Motion produced by electricity employed as power.

e·lec·tro·mo·tive (i·lek′trə·mō′tiv) adj. Producing, or tending to produce an electric current; distinguished from magnetomotive.

electromotive force That which tends to produce the flow of electricity from one point to another; difference of potential between the terminals of an electrolyte, voltaic cell, or other conducting medium; voltage.

electromotive series An arrangement of the elements in a series such that each will, in general and under suitable conditions, replace from its compounds any element listed after it. See table below for the series of metals, from the most active to the least active. Also called displacement, activity, or electrochemical series.

ELECTROMOTIVE SERIES OF THE METALS

1. Potassium	10. Chromium	19. Arsenic
2. Barium	11. Iron	20. Bismuth
3. Strontium	12. Cadmium	21. Antimony
4. Calcium	13. Cobalt	22. Mercury
5. Sodium	14. Nickel	23. Silver
6. Magnesium	15. Tin	24. Gold
7. Aluminum	16. Lead	25. Platinum
8. Manganese	17. Hydrogen
9. Zinc	18. Copper

e·lec·tro·mo·tor (i·lek′trə·mō′tər) n. 1 An electric motor. 2 Any electric source, as a voltaic cell.

e·lec·tro·my·o·gram (i·lek′trō·mī′ə·gram) n. The tracing made by an electromyograph.

e·lec·tro·my·o·graph (i·lek′trō·mī′ə·graf, -gräf) n. Med. An instrument for determining the location and extent of nerve lesions by the application of an electric stimulus to muscles whose responses are converted into both sound and visual records. —e·lec′tro·my·og′ra·phy (-mī·og′rə·fē) n. e·lec′tro·my′o·graph′i·cal adj.

e·lec·tron (i·lek′tron) n. An electrically charged particle of the atom: it carries the unit charge of negative electricity, estimated at 4.8×10^{-10} cgs electrostatic units, and has a mass approximately one eighteen-hundredth (more exactly 1/1837) of that of the proton. Electrons are emitted in the form of beta particles and cathode rays. —free electron An electron not permanently bound to any atom and free to move within the limits of a given substance or material, as in a galvanic current. [< Gk. ēlektron amber] e·lec·tro·nar·co·sis (i·lek′trō·när·kō′sis) n. Psychiatry Narcosis induced by the passing of a very mild electric current between two electrodes attached to the sides of the head: used in the treatment of schizophrenia and related mental disorders.

e·lec·tro·neg·a·tive (i·lek′trō·neg′ə·tiv) adj. 1 Appearing, as an element in electrolysis, at the positive electrode. 2 Having the property of becoming negatively electrified by contact with or the chemical action of another element.

electron gun An apparatus, usually in the form of a slender tube with thermionic filaments and focusing and accelerating electrodes, used in television for directing a steady stream of electrons in a given direction.

e·lec·tron·ic (i·lek′tron′ik, ē′lek-) adj. 1 Of or pertaining to electrons. 2 Operating or produced by the movement of free electrons or other carriers of electric charge, as in an electron tube. 3 Pertaining to electronics. —e·lec′tron′i·cal·ly adv.

e·lec·tron·ics (i·lek′tron′iks, ē′lek-) n. pl. (Construed as singular) The study of the properties and behavior of electrons under all conditions, especially with reference to technical and industrial applications.

electron lens A distribution of an electric field surrounding the path of an electron beam such that the beam may be concentrated in a focus similar to that of an optical lens.

electron microscope A microscope which uses high-voltage streams of electrons in order to bring into visibility objects not accessible to the relatively large wavelengths of visible light used by the most powerful optical microscopes.

electronic music Music based on an arrangement of electronically produced, organized, or altered sounds, recorded on tape.

e·lec·tro·nog·ra·phy (i·lek′trō·nog′rə·fē) n. A method of printing without pressure between paper and the inked surface, by means of an applied electric charge which ionizes the ink particles, causing them to migrate to the oppositely charged printing surface. [< ELECTRON + -(O)GRAPHY] electron optics A method for the control of electron beams or rays by properly adjusted magnetic or electric fields so that the flow of electrons will simulate the effect of light rays in an optical instrument.

electron shell Physics The orbital arrangement of electrons outside the nucleus of an atom.

electron tube A high vacuum tube in which a stream of electrons is emitted from a heated cathode and subjected to the controlling action of a grid which amplifies and directs the current.

electron volt A unit of energy equal to that acquired by an electron which passes through a potential difference of one volt: equal to 1.602×10^{-12} erg: also called equivalent volt.

e·lec·tro·op·tics (i·lek′trō·op′tiks) n. Physics The study of the modification of optical phenomena by the application of an electric field.

e·lec·trop·a·thy (i·lek′trop′ə·thē, ē′lek-) n. Med. The treatment of disease by means of electricity. —e·lec′tro·path′ic (-trə·path′ik) adj. —e·lec′tro·path′i·cal·ly adv.

e·lec·tro·pho·re·sis (i·lek′trō·fə·rē′sis) n. Chem.

The slow movement of colloidal particles suspended in a fluid, when under the influence of an electric field.

e·lec·troph·o·rus (i·lek′trof′ər·əs, ē′lek-) n. pl. ·ri (-rī) An instrument for generating static electricity by induction: commonly a flat disk of resin, to which may be applied another of wood coated with tinfoil. Also e·lec·tro·phore (i·lek′trə·fôr, -fōr).

e·lec·tro·phren·ic (i·lek′trə·fren′ik) adj. Med. Describing a method of artificial respiration by the electrical stimulation of one or both of the phrenic nerves.

e·lec·tro·phys·i·ol·o·gy (i·lek′trō·fiz′ē·ol′ə·jē) n. The study of the electric phenomena of living organs. — e·lec′tro·phys′i·o·log′i·cal (-fiz′ē·ə·loj′i·kəl) adj.

e·lec·tro·plate (i·lek′trə·plāt′) v.t. ·plat·ed, ·plat·ing To coat with metal by electrolysis, the object being immersed in a solution of a salt of the metal in connection with the negative pole of a battery or dynamo. — n. An electroplated article. — e·lec′tro·plat′er n.

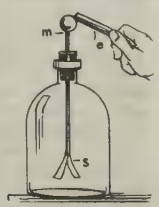
e·lec·tro·plat·ing (i·lek′trə·plā′ting) n. 1 The act or process of depositing metal by electric means. 2 The coat of metal so deposited.

e·lec·tro·pos·i·tive (i·lek′trō·poz′ə·tiv) adj. 1 Appearing at the negative electrode: said of an element in electrolysis. 2 Having the property of becoming positively electrified by contact or chemical action.



ELECTROSCOPE
Metallic pole (m), electrically charged by (e), conducts the impulse to strips (s) that acquire the charge and move apart in electrostatic repulsion.

e·lec·tro·scis·sion (i·lek′trō·sizh′ən) n. Surg. The cutting or division of tissues by an electrically operated knife.

e·lec·tro·scope (i·lek′trə·skōp) n. An instrument for detecting the presence of electricity upon a conductor by the attraction or repulsion of pith balls or strips of gold leaf. See illustration. — e·lec′tro·scop′ic (-skop′ik) adj.

e·lec·tro·shock (i·lek′trō·shok′) n. Psychiatry A shock to the nervous system of a mental patient, produced by a carefully regulated electric current passed through the head.

e·lec·tro·stat·ics (i·lek′trō·stat′iks) n. That branch of electrical science which treats of the phenomena of electricity at rest or of frictional electricity: opposed to electrokinetics. — e·lec′tro·stat′ic or ·i·cal adj. — e·lec′tro·stat′i·cal·ly adv.

electrostatic unit An electric charge which, concentrated at one point in a vacuum, would repel with a force of 1 dyne an equal and like charge placed 1 centimeter away.

e·lec·tro·ste·nol·y·sis (i·lek′trō·sti·nol′ə·sis) n. The depositing of metallic particles in the pores of a high-resistance membrane by electrolysis.

e·lec·tro·tax·is (i·lek′trō·tak′sis) n. Biol. 1 That property of protoplasm which makes it susceptible to the influence of an electric stimulus, as shown by the direction of movements. 2 Any similar property in simple organisms. Also e·lec′trot′ro·pism (i·lek′trot′rə·piz′əm, ē′lek-). — e·lec′tro·tac′tic (-tak′tik) adj.

e·lec·tro·tech·nics (i·lek′trō·tek′niks) n. The science of the methods, processes, and operations by which electricity is applied in the industrial arts. — e·lec′tro·tech′nic (-nik) or ·ni·cal adj.

e·lec·tro·ther·a·peu·tics (i·lek′trō·ther′ə·pyōō′tiks) n. The treatment of disease by electricity, or the laws, etc., of such treatment. Also e·lec′tro·ther′a·py (-ə·pē). — e·lec′tro·ther′a·peu′tic (-tik) or ·ti·cal adj.

e·lec·tro·ther·a·pist (i·lek′trō·ther′ə·pist) n. A practitioner of electrotherapeutics. Also e·lec′tro·ther′a·peu′tist.

e·lec·trot·o·nus (i·lek′trot′ə·nəs, ē′lek-) n. Physiol. The change in the activity of a nerve or muscle induced by a voltaic current. [<NL <ELECTRO- + Gk. tonos tension] — e·lec·tro·ton·ic (i·lek′trō·ton′ik) adj.

e·lec·tro·type (i·lek′trō·tīp′) n. 1 A metallic copy of any surface, as a coin, made by electric deposition, especially one of a page of type for printing. 2 An impression from an electrotyped cut. 3 The process of electrotyping; electrotypy. — v.t. ·typed, ·typ·ing To make an electrotype of.

e·lec·tro·typ·er (i·lek′trō·tī′pər) n. One who electrotypes. Also e·lec′tro·typ′ist.

e·lec·tro·typ·ic (i·lek′trō·tip′ik) adj. Pertaining to or made by electrotyping.

e·lec·tro·typ·ing (i·lek′trō·tī′ping) n. The act or business of forming electrotypes. Also e·lec′tro·typ′y (-tī′pē).

e·lec·tro·va·lence (i·lek′trō·vā′ləns) n. Chem. A bond formed by the complete transfer of electrons from the atoms of one element of a compound to the atoms of another element: distinguished from covalence.

e·lec·tro·va·lent (i·lek′trō·vā′lənt) adj. Chem. Designating a compound formed by electrovalence.

e·lec·trum (i·lek′trəm) n. 1 German silver or other like alloy. 2 Anciently, amber. 3 Native gold containing a large percentage of silver. [<L <Gk. ēlektron amber]

e·lec·tu·ar·y (i·lek′chōō·er′ē) n. pl. ·ar·ies A medicine mixed with honey or sirup to form a paste. [<LL electuarium <Gk. ekleikton <ek out + leichein lick] el·ee·mos·y·nar (el′ə·mos′ə·nər, el′ē·ə-) n. 1 One who gives charity. 2 The supervisor of the distribution of papal charities. 3 Obs. Almoner.

el·ee·mos·y·nar·y (el′ə·mos′ə·ner′ē, el′ē·ə-) adj. 1 Of or pertaining to charity or alms; existing for the relief of the poor. 2 Charitable; nonprofit: eleemosynary institutions. 3 Aided by or dependent upon charity: the eleemosynary classes. — n. pl. ·nar·ies A recipient of charity. [<Med. L eleemosynarius <eleemosyna ALMS] el·e·gance (el′ə·gəns) n. 1 The state or quality of being elegant or refined. 2 Anything elegant. Also el′e·gan·cy.

el·e·gant (el′ə·gənt) adj. 1 Marked by refinement, grace, or symmetry, as of action, form or structure; also, possessing or exhibiting refined taste. 2 Possessing a fine sense of beauty or fitness. 3 Colloq. Excellent; capital. 4 Marked by completeness and simplicity; appropriate: an elegant solution. [<F élégant <L elegans, -antis fastidious] — el′e·gant·ly adv.

Synonyms: dainty, exquisite. Elegant (Latin elegans, select) refers to the lighter, finer elements of beauty in form or motion, but is often misused as a general term of approval. Exquisite denotes the utmost perfection of the elegant in minute details; we speak of an elegant garment, and exquisite lace. Exquisite is also applied to intense keenness of any feeling; as, exquisite delight; exquisite pain. Dainty, at its best, applies to what is at once slight, delicate, and pleasing; in its extreme use, it may apply to sensibilities or feelings too delicate for the demands of practical life, overnice, squeamish. See BEAUTIFUL, CHOICE, FINE[1], POLITE. Antonyms: common, coarse, harsh, rude.

el·e·gi·ac (el′ə·jī′ək, i·lē′jē·ak) adj. 1 Pertaining to elegies. 2 Of the nature of an elegy; sad; plaintive. 3 In ancient prosody, written in distichs consisting of hexameter and pentameter. Also el′e·gi′a·cal. — n. 1 A poet who writes in the tone or in the meter of the elegy. 2 pl. Verse composed in the elegiac spirit or form.

el·e·gist (el′ə·jist) n. A writer of funeral songs; one who writes in elegiac verse. Also e·le·gi·ast (i·lē′jē·ast), el·e·gi·og·ra·pher (el′ə·jē·og′rə·fər).

e·le·git (i·lē′jit) n. Law 1 A writ of execution, issued on the election of a judgment creditor, directing the sheriff to turn over to him the debtor's attachable goods, and, if these be insufficient, half the debtor's land, the latter to be held till the rents and profits shall extinguish the debt. 2 The right secured by this writ. [<L] el·e·gize (el′ə·jīz) v.t. & v.i. ·gized, ·giz·ing To mourn or commemorate in elegiac form.

el·e·gy (el′ə·jē) n. pl. ·gies 1 A funeral song. 2 A meditative poem with sorrowful theme. 3 A classical poem written in elegiac verse. [<F élégie <L elegia <Gk. elegeia <elegos a song]

E·lek·tra (i·lek′trə) See ELECTRA.

el·e·ment (el′ə·mənt) n. 1 A component or essential part; especially, a simple part of anything complex; a constituent; ingredient. 2 pl. First principles or fundamental ideas; rudiments. 3 Eccl. The bread and wine of the Lord's Supper. 4 An ultimate and essential principle in the make-up of anything; essential constituent; anciently, one of the substances —earth, air, fire, and water—supposed to make up all things: still in popular use: the fury of the elements, the devouring element. 5 The natural sphere or environment: The element of fishes is water. 6 Physics One of a limited number of substances each of which is composed entirely of atoms having an invariant nuclear charge and none of which may be decomposed by ordinary chemical means, as gold, carbon, sodium, etc. See Table, page 408. 7 One of the primary parts of an organism; also, a cell or morphological unit. 8 One of a number of parts composing a symmetrical whole. 9 Geom. One of the forms or data which together compose a figure, as a line, a point, a plane, a space. 10 Math. ▪ An infinitely small portion of a magnitude; a generatrix. b A term in an algebraic expression. 11 One of the dissimilar substances in a voltaic cell or battery, etc. 12 A group or class of people distinguished from a larger group to which it belongs by its own peculiar beliefs, attitudes, behavior, etc.: the conservative element in the party; a rowdy element in the crowd. See synonyms under PART, PARTICLE. — to be in one's element To be in pleasing surroundings or be engaged in activities in which one excels. [<L elementum first principle] el·e·men·tal (el'ə·men'təl) adj. 1 Pertaining to the fundamental or basic constituent of anything; primary; simple. 2 Having to do with rudiments or first principles. 3 Pertaining to or like one of the four elements of ancient physics, fire, air, earth, and water. 4 Pertaining to the forces, phenomena, or powers of physical nature, often as personified: elemental spirits. 5 Comparable to the great primal powers of nature: elemental storms. 6 Of or pertaining to chemical elements, or one of the chemical elements; uncompounded. — el'·e·men'tal·ly adv.

el·e·men·ta·ry (el'ə·men'tər·ē) adj. 1 Of, pertaining to, or being an element or elements, in any sense. 2 Treating of the first principles of anything; rudimentary: an elementary analysis. 3 Having the nature of an infinitesimal part of a quantity or magnitude. — el'e·men'·ta·ri·ly adv. — el'e·men'ta·ri·ness n.

elementary education Public school and private education beyond kindergarten and preceding secondary school, from six to eight years in length, dealing with the fundamentals of education.

elementary school See under SCHOOL.

el·e·mi (el'ə·mē) n. Any one of several gum resins obtained from tropical trees of various genera, especially Manila elemi, from the pili tree of the Philippines: used in drugs and varnishes. [<Sp. elemi, ? <Arabic al-lāmī]

E·le·na (Sp., Ital. ā·lā'nä) See HELEN.

e·len·chus (i·leng'kəs) n. pl. ·chi (-kī) 1 The contradictory opposite of a proposition; hence, a refuting argument; a refutation. 2 A false refutation; sophism. Also e·lench (i·lengk'). [<L <Gk. elenchos a cross-examination] — e·len'chic or ·chi·cal, e·lenc'·tic or ·ti·cal adj.

e·le·o·lite (i·lē'ə·līt) See ELAEOLITE.

el·e·o·plast (el'ē·ə·plast') See ELAIOPLAST.

el·e·phant (el'ə·fənt) n. 1 A massively built, almost hairless ungulate mammal of Asia and Africa (family Elephantidae), the largest of existing land animals, having a flexible proboscis or trunk, and the upper incisors developed as tusks valued as the chief source of ivory. There are two genera: the small-eared Asian elephant, Elephas Maximus and the African elephant, Loxodonta africana, with large flapping ears. 2 Something unwieldy, burdensome, or hard to dispose of. See WHITE ELEPHANT. 3 A size of paper, 23 by 38 inches. [<OF olifant <L elephantus <Gk. elephas, -antos ivory; ult. origin unknown]

AFRICAN ELEPHANT (Height at the shoulder rarely above 11 feet; the Indian elephant slightly smaller; the cows, 7 to 9 feet)

El·e·phan·ta (el'ə·fan'tə) An island in Bombay Harbor; site of Brahmanic caves carved in hillside (main hall, eighth century) and statues.

Elephant Butte Dam The main unit of the Rio Grande reclamation project in SW New Mexico; 306 feet high; 1,674 feet long; impounding Elephant Butte Reservoir.

elephant ear The taro.

elephant foot A South African twining vine (Testudinaria elephantipes) of the yam family, having a conical, cormlike stem covered with a barky substance which, becoming deeply cracked, forms large angular protuberances like those on the shell of a tortoise (whence the name tortoise plant): often cultivated in greenhouses. Also called Hottentot bread. Also el'e·phant's-foot'.

el·e·phan·ti·a·sis (el'ə·fən·tī'ə·sis) n. Pathol. The final chronic stage of a filariasis caused by the presence in the blood and lymph of a parasitic nematode worm (Wuchereria bancrofti). It is characterized by a thickening and hardening of the skin, together with an enormous enlargement of the part affected, usually the lower extremities. [<L <Gk. <elephas elephant]

Synonyms (verb): engage, engross, hire, use. In general terms it may be said that to employ is to devote to one's purpose, to use is to render subservient to one's purpose; what is used is viewed as more absolutely an instrument than what is employed; a merchant employs a clerk; he uses pen and paper; hence, use, as applied to persons, inclines to the derogatory sense; as, The conspirators used him as a go-between. That which is used is often consumed in the using; as, We used twenty tons of coal last winter; in such cases we could not substitute employ. A person may be employed in his own work or in that of another; in the latter case the service is always understood to be for pay. In this connection employ is a word of more dignity than hire; a general is employed in his country's service; a mercenary adventurer is hired to fight; hire now implies that the one hired works directly and primarily for the pay. See OCCUPY, RETAIN.

Synonyms (noun): accomplishment, achievement, bound, boundary, cessation, close, completion, conclusion, consequence, consummation, design, effect, expiration, extent, extremity, finale, finis, finish, fulfilment, goal, intent, issue, limit, outcome, period, point, purpose, result, termination, terminus, tip, utmost, uttermost. The end is the terminal part of a material object that has length; the extremity is distinctively the terminal point, and may thus be but part of the end in the general sense of that word; the extremity is viewed as that which is most remote from some center, or some mean or standard position; the southern end of South America includes all Patagonia, the southern extremity or point is Cape Horn. Tip has nearly the same meaning as extremity, but is said of small or slight and tapering objects; as, the tip of the finger; point in such connections is said of that which is drawn out to exceeding fineness or sharpness, as the point of a needle, a fork, or a sword; extremity is said of something considerable; we do not speak of the extremity of a needle. A goal is an end sought or striven for, as in a race. For the figurative senses of end and its associated words, compare the synonyms for the verb END; also for AIM, CONSEQUENCE, DESIGN, EVENT, PURPOSE, REASON. Antonyms: see synonyms for BEGINNING.

Synonyms (verb): cease, close, complete, conclude, desist, expire, finish, quit, terminate, top. That ends, or is ended, of which there is no more, whether or not more was intended or needed; that is closed, completed, concluded, or finished which has come to an expected or appropriate end. A tumult in the audience may cause a speech to be ended when it is neither closed, completed, nor finished, nor, in the strict sense, concluded. An argument may be closed with nothing proved; when an argument is concluded all that is deemed necessary to prove the point has been stated. To finish is to do the last thing there is to do. To terminate may be to bring either to an arbitrary or to an appropriate end; as, He terminated his remarks abruptly; The spire terminates in a cross. A thing stops that comes to rest from motion; or the motion stops or ceases when the object comes to rest; stop frequently signifies to bring or come to a sudden and decided cessation of motion, progress, or action of any kind. Compare ABOLISH, CEASE, EFFECT, FINISH, TRANSACT. Antonyms: commence, found, inaugurate, initiate, institute, open, originate, start, undertake. Compare INSTITUTE (verb).

en·dear·ment (in·dir′mənt) n. 1 Something, as an act, that expresses or attracts affection; an utterance of fondness; a caress. 2 The act of endearing, or the state of being endeared; hence, affection; love.

en·deav·or (in·dev′ər) n. An attempt or effort to do or attain something; earnest exertion for an end. — v.t. To make an effort to do or effect; try: usually with an infinitive as object. — v.i. To make an effort; strive: usually with at, after, or for. Also Brit. en·deav′our. [ME endeveren <EN[1] + DEVOIR. Cf. F se mettre en devoir make it one's duty, set about]

Synonyms (noun): attempt, effort, essay, exertion, struggle, trial. Effort denotes the voluntary putting forth of power to attain or accomplish some specific thing; it reaches toward a definite end; exertion is a putting forth of power without special reference to an object. Every effort is an exertion, but not every exertion is an effort. Attempt is more experimental than effort, endeavor less strenuous but more continuous. An effort is a single act, an endeavor a continued series of acts. A struggle is a violent effort or strenuous exertion. An essay is an attempt, effort, or endeavor made as a test of the powers of the one who makes it. See AIM, ATTEMPT.

Synonyms (verb): attempt, essay, strive, try, undertake. To attempt is to take action somewhat experimentally with the hope and purpose of accomplishing a certain result; to endeavor is to attempt strenuously and with firm and enduring purpose. To attempt expresses a single act; to endeavor, a continuous exertion; we say, I will endeavor (not I will attempt) while I live. To attempt is with the view of accomplishing; to essay with a view of testing our own powers. To undertake is to accept or take upon oneself as an obligation, as some business, labor, or trust; the word often implies complete assurance of success: as, I will undertake to produce the witness. To strive suggests little of the result, much of toil, strain, and contest, in seeking it; I will strive to fulfil your wishes, that is, I will spare no labor and exertion to do it. Try is the most comprehensive of these words. The original idea of testing or experimenting is not thought of when a man says "I will try." To attempt suggests giving up, if the thing is not accomplished at a stroke; to try implies using other means and studying out other ways if not at first successful. Try is more earnest; endeavor is more mild and formal. Antonyms: abandon, dismiss, drop, neglect, omit, overlook.

en·due (in·dōō′, -dyōō′) v.t. ·dued, ·du·ing 1 To provide or endow, as with some quality or power: with with. 2 To put on; don. 3 To clothe; garb. Also spelled indue. [Fusion of OF enduire introduce <L inducere (see INDUCE) and OF enduire clothe <L induere; infl. in meaning by ENDOW]

en·dur·ance (in·dōōr′əns, -dyōōr′-) n. 1 The capacity or power to endure; ability to suffer pain, distress, hardship, or any very prolonged stress without succumbing; patient fortitude. 2 The act or experience of enduring or suffering. 3 Obs. Hardship. See synonyms under FORTITUDE.

en·dure (in·dōōr′, -dyōōr′) v. ·dured, ·dur·ing v.t. 1 To bear or undergo, as pain, grief, or injury, especially without yielding; withstand; suffer. 2 To tolerate; put up with. —v.i. 3 To last; continue to be. 4 To suffer without yielding; hold out. [<OF endurer <L indurare <in- in + durare harden <durus hard]

Synonyms: abide, afford, allow, bear, brook, permit, suffer, support, sustain, tolerate, undergo. Bear is the most general of these words; it is metaphorically to hold up or keep up a burden of care, pain, grief, annoyance, or the like, without sinking, lamenting, or repining. Allow and permit involve large concession of the will; whispering is allowed by the schoolteacher who does not forbid nor censure it; a state tolerates a religion which it would be glad to suppress. To endure is to bear with strain and resistance, but with conscious power; endure conveys a fuller suggestion of contest and conquest than bear. One may choose to endure the pain of a surgical operation rather than take anesthetics; he permits the thing to come which he must brace himself to endure when it comes. To afford is to be equal to a pecuniary demand, that is, to be able to bear it. Abide combines the senses of await and endure; as, I will abide the result. Compare ABIDE, LIVE, PERSEVERE, PERSIST, STAND, SUPPORT. Antonyms: break, despair, droop, fail, faint, fall, falter, sink, succumb, surrender, yield.

en·dur·ing (in·dōōr′ing, -dyōōr′-) adj. 1 Lasting; permanent. 2 Long-suffering. See synonyms under PERMANENT, PERPETUAL. —en·dur′ing·ly adv. —en·dur′ing·ness n.

end·wise (end′wīz′) adv. 1 With the end foremost or uppermost. 2 On end; so as to present the end toward the spectator or some object. 3 Lengthwise; from end to end. Also end′ways′ (-wāz′).

en·e·ma (en′ə·mə) n. pl. ·mas or e·nem·a·ta (e·nem′ə·tə) Med. 1 A liquid injected into the rectum for cleansing or nutritive purposes. 2 The injection of such a liquid. 3 The apparatus for such an injection. [<Gk. <enienai <en- in + hienai send] en·e·my (en′ə·mē) n. pl. ·mies 1 One who cherishes resentment or malicious purpose toward another; an adversary; foe. 2 One of a hostile army or nation. 3 A hostile nation or military force collectively. —adj. 1 Of or pertaining to a hostile army or power. 2 Obs. Unfriendly; hostile. [<OF enemi <L inimicus <in- not + amicus friend]

Synonyms (noun): adversary, antagonist, competitor, foe, opponent, rival. An enemy in private life is one who is moved by hostile feeling with active disposition to injure; but in military language all who fight on the opposite side are called enemies or collectively "the enemy," where no personal animosity may be implied; foe, which is rather a poetical and literary word, implies intensely hostile spirit and purpose. An antagonist is one who opposes and is opposed actively and with intensity of effort; an opponent, one in whom the attitude of resistance is the more prominent; a competitor, one who seeks the same object for which another is striving; antagonists in wrestling, competitors in business, opponents in debate may contend with no personal ill will; rivals in love, ambition, etc., rarely avoid inimical feeling. Adversary now commonly denotes one who not only opposes another in fact, but does so with hostile spirit or perhaps out of pure malignity. Compare synonyms for AMBITION. Antonyms: abettor, accessory, accomplice, ally, friend, helper, supporter.

enemy alien An alien living or interned in a country which is at war with his own country.

en·ter·pris·ing (en′tər·prī′zing) adj. Energetic and progressive. — en′ter·pris′ing·ly adv.

en·ter·tain (en′tər·tān′) v.t. 1 To hold the attention of; amuse; divert. 2 To extend hospitality to; receive as a guest. 3 To take into consideration, as a proposal. 4 To keep or bear in mind; maintain: to entertain a grudge. 5 Obs. To keep up; maintain. — v.i. 6 To receive and care for guests: to entertain lavishly. [<F entretenir < entre- between (<L inter-) + tenir < tenere hold] — en′ter·tain′·a·ble adj. — en′ter·tain′er n.

Synonyms: amuse, beguile, cheer, delight, disport, divert, enliven, gratify, interest, occupy, please, recreate. To entertain, in the sense here considered, is to engage and pleasantly occupy the attention; to amuse is to occupy the attention in an especially bright and cheerful way, often with that which excites merriment or laughter; as, He entertained us with an amusing story. To divert is to turn from serious thoughts or laborious pursuits to something that lightly and agreeably occupies the mind; one may be entertained or amused who has nothing serious or laborious from which to be diverted. To recreate, literally to re-create, is to engage mind or body in some pleasing activity that restores strength and energy for serious work. To beguile is, as it were, to cheat into cheer and comfort by something that insensibly draws thought or feeling away from pain or disquiet. We beguile a weary hour, cheer the despondent, divert the preoccupied, enliven a dull evening or company, gratify our friends' wishes, entertain, interest, please a listening audience, occupy idle time, disport ourselves when merry, recreate when worn with toil; we amuse ourselves or others with whatever pleasantly passes the time without special exertion, each according to his taste. See ACCOMMODATE, CHERISH, INTEREST. Antonyms: annoy, bore, busy, disquiet, distract, disturb, tire, weary.

en·ter·tain·ment (en′tər·tān′mənt) n. 1 The act of receiving and caring for guests; hospitable accommodation in the inn or dwelling of a host; the furnishing of food, lodging, and service to a guest. 2 A source or means of amusement; a diverting performance, especially a public performance, as a concert, drama, or the like. 3 Pleasure afforded by an amusing act or spectacle; amusement. 4 A social party; also, the refreshments provided for guests. 5 Obs. Maintenance; employment; service.

Synonyms: amusement, cheer, delight, diversion, enjoyment, frolic, fun, merriment, pastime, pleasure, recreation, sport. Entertainment and recreation imply thought and mental occupation, but in an agreeable, refreshing way; they are therefore words of a high order. Entertainment is used of somewhat mirthful, mental delight; recreation may, and usually does, combine the mental with the physical. Amusement and pastime are nearly equivalent, the latter probably the lighter word; many slight things may be pastimes which we should hardly dignify by the name of amusements. Sports are almost wholly on the physical plane, while involving a certain grade of mental action. Cheer may be very quiet, as the cheer of a bright fire to an aged traveler; merriment suggests liveliness and laughter; fun and frolic are apt to be boisterous. Compare ENTERTAIN, FROLIC, SPORT. Antonyms: ennui, fatigue, labor, lassitude, toil, weariness, work.

en·thal·py (en·thal′pē, en′thəl·pē) n. Physics The quantity of heat in a substance or physical system per unit of mass; heat content. [<Gk. enthalpein < en- in + thalpein warm] en·thu·si·asm (in·thōō′zē·az′əm) n. 1 Earnest and fervent feeling; ardent zeal for a person or cause. 2 Archaic Exalted or ecstatic feeling; also, irrational religious ecstasy; divine fury or frenzy; possession. 3 An object of great interest to a person. [<LL enthusiasmus <Gk. enthusiasmos, ult. < entheos, enthous inspired < en- in + theos god]

Synonyms: ardor, devotion, eagerness, earnestness, ecstasy, excitement, extravagance, fanaticism, fervency, fervor, frenzy, inspiration, intensity, passion, rapture, transport, vehemence, warmth, zeal. The old meaning of enthusiasm implies a pseudo-inspiration, an almost frantic extravagance in behalf of something supposed to be an expression of the divine will. This sense remains as the controlling one in the kindred noun enthusiast. Enthusiasm has now chiefly the meaning of an earnest and commendable devotion, an intense and eager interest. Zeal is burning earnestness, always tending to vigorous action with all the devotion of enthusiasm, but often without its hopefulness. Compare WARMTH. Antonyms: calculation, calmness, caution, coldness, deadness, dulness, indifference, lukewarmness, policy, prudence, timidity, wariness.

en·thu·si·ast (in·thōō′zē·ast) n. One prone to or moved by enthusiasm; an ardent adherent; zealot.

[< v.] —v.t. 1 To value highly; regard as having worth or excellence. 2 To think to be; deem; consider: to esteem one fortunate. [< F estimer < L aestimare value]

Synonyms (noun): estimate, estimation, favor, regard, respect. Esteem for a person is a favorable opinion on the basis of worth, especially of moral worth, joined with a feeling of interest in and attraction toward the person. Regard for a person is the mental view or feeling that springs from a sense of his excellence, with a cordial and hearty friendliness. Regard is more personal and less distant than esteem, and adds a special kindliness; respect is a more distant word than esteem. Respect may be wholly on one side, while regard is commonly mutual; respect in the fullest sense is given to what is lofty, worthy, and honorable, or to a person of such qualities; but we may pay respect to station or office, regardless of the person holding it. Estimate has more of calculation; as, My estimate of the man, or of his abilities, is very high. Estimation involves the idea of appraisal, and is especially used of the feeling entertained by numbers of people; as, He stood high in public estimation. Compare ESTEEM verb, ATTACHMENT, FRIENDSHIP, LOVE, REGARD. Antonyms: abhorrence, antipathy, aversion, contempt, dislike, hatred, loathing, repugnance.

Synonyms (verb): appreciate, calculate, consider, deem, estimate, hold, prize, regard, think, value. Esteem and estimate alike imply to set a certain mental value upon, but esteem is less precise and mercantile than calculate or estimate. We esteem a jewel precious; we estimate it to be worth so much money. In popular usage esteem, as said of persons, denotes a union of respect and kindly feeling and, in the highest sense, of moral approbation; as, one whom I highly esteem. To appreciate anything is to be deeply or keenly sensible of or sensitive to its qualities or influence; as, to appreciate beauty or harmony; to appreciate one's services. To prize is to set a high value on for something more than merely commercial reasons. To regard (F regarder look at, observe) is to have a certain mental view favorable or unfavorable; as, I regard him as a friend; or, I regard him as a villain; regard has a distinctively favorable sense as applied to institutions, proprieties, duties, etc., but does not share the use of the noun regard as applied to persons; we regard the Sabbath; we regard a person's feelings; we have a regard for the person. See ADMIRE, APPRECIATE, LIKE. Compare ESTEEM noun. Antonyms: see synonyms for ABHOR.

Synonyms: case, chance, circumstance, consequence, contingency, end, episode, fact, fortune, incident, issue, occurrence, outcome, possibility, result, sequel. Etymologically, the incident is that which falls in, the event that which comes out; event is thus greater and more signal than incident; we speak of trifling incidents, great events; incidents of daily life, events of history. Circumstance agrees with incident in denoting a matter of relatively slight importance, but implies a more direct connection with the principal matter as indicated in the phrase "circumstantial evidence." An occurrence is, etymologically, that which we run against, without thought of its origin, connection, or tendency. An episode is connected with the main course of events, like an incident or circumstance, but is of more independent interest and importance. Outcome is the Saxon, and event the Latin for expressing the same original idea. Consequence and result express more of logical connection, and are more comprehensive. The end may be simple cessation; the event is what has been accomplished; the event of a war is victory or defeat; the end of the war is reached when a treaty of peace is signed. Since the future is contingent, event comes to have the meaning of a contingency; as, In the event of his death, the policy will at once fall due. Compare CIRCUMSTANCE, CONSEQUENCE, END.

e·vent·ful (i·vent'fəl) adj. Attended or characterized by important or noteworthy events; also, momentous. — e·vent'ful·ly adv. — e·vent'ful·ness n. ev·i·dent (ev'ə·dənt) adj. Plain, manifest, or clear, as to the mind or the senses; obvious. [<L evidens, -entis, ppr. of evidere < e- out + videre see] — ev'i·dent·ly adv.

Synonyms: apparent, clear, conspicuous, discernible, distinct, glaring, indubitable, manifest, obvious, open, overt, palpable, patent, perceptible, plain, tangible, transparent, unmistakable, visible. That is apparent which clearly appears to the senses or to the mind as soon as the attention is directed toward it; that is evident of which the mind is made sure by some inference that supplements the facts of perception: The marks of a struggle were apparent in broken shrubbery and trampled ground, and the finding of a mutilated body and a rifled purse made it evident that robbery and murder had been committed. That is manifest which we can lay the hand upon; manifest is thus stronger than evident, as touch is more absolute than sight. That is obvious which is directly in the way so that it cannot be missed; as, The application of the remark was obvious. Visible applies to all that can be perceived by the sense of sight, whether the noonday sun, a ship on the horizon, or a microscopic object. Discernible applies to that which is dimly or faintly visible, requiring strain and effort in order to be seen; as, The ship was discernible through the mist. That is conspicuous which stands out and attracts the attention. Palpable and tangible express more emphatically the thought of manifest. See APPARENT, CLEAR, MANIFEST, NOTORIOUS. Antonyms: concealed, covert, dark, hidden, impalpable, impenetrable, imperceptible, invisible, latent, obscure, occult, secret, undiscovered, unimagined, unknown, unseen, unsuspected, veiled.

ex·am·ple (ig·zam′pəl, -zäm′-) n. 1 A thing or person suitable to be used as a model. 2 An instance of something to be avoided; an act, especially a punishment, serving or designed to serve as a warning. 3 A sample; specimen. 4 An instance serving to illustrate a rule. 5 A problem to be solved. 6 That with which something may be compared; precedent; parallel. — v.t. Obs. 1 To exemplify. 2 To teach by example. [<OF, earlier essample <L exemplum something taken out < eximere < ex- out + emere buy. Doublet of SAMPLE.]

Synonyms (noun): archetype, exemplar, exemplification, ideal, model, pattern, precedent, prototype, sample, specimen, standard, type, warning. From its original sense of sample or specimen (L exemplum), example derives the seemingly contradictory meanings, on the one hand of a pattern or model, and on the other hand of a warning—a sample or specimen of what is to be followed, or of what is to be shunned. An example, however, may be more than a sample or specimen of any class; it may be the very archetype or prototype to which the whole class must conform. Example comes nearer to model than to the necessary exactness of the pattern. In its application to a person or thing, exemplar can scarcely be distinguished from example; but example is most frequently used for an act, or course of action, for which exemplar is not used; as, one sets a good (or a bad) example. An exemplification is an illustrative working out in action of a principle or law, without any reference to its being copied or repeated; an example guides, an exemplification illustrates or explains. Compare ARCHETYPE, MODEL, PRECEDENT, SAMPLE.

ferret badger A stout-bodied carnivore (genus Helictis) of SE Asia.

ferri- combining form Chem. Containing iron in the ferric condition: ferricyanide. [Var. of FERRO-] fer·ri·age (fer′ē·ij) n. 1 The act of ferrying; conveyance by ferry. 2 The toll charged for ferrying.

fer·ric (fer′ik) adj. Chem. 1 Pertaining to iron. 2 Pertaining to or designating compounds of iron in its higher valence. [<L ferrum iron + -IC] ferric acetate Chem. A reddish-brown powder, $FeO_5H_7C_4$, widely used as an ingredient in many chemicals as a mordant, and in certain drug preparations.

ferric oxide Hematite.

ferric sulfate Chem. A compound of iron, $Fe_2(SO_4)_3$, uniting with water in the form of colorless crystals: used alone or as iron alum in tanning and dyeing.

fer·ri·cy·an·ic (fer′ə·sī·an′ik) adj. Chem. Of or pertaining to a compound of iron in its higher valence and cyanogen: ferricyanic acid, $H_3Fe(CN)_6$.

fer·ri·cy·a·nide (fer′ə·sī′ə·nīd, -nid) n. Chem. A salt containing the trivalent negative ion radical $Fe(CN)_6$, as potassium ferricyanide, $K_3Fe(CN)_6$.

fer·rif·er·ous (fə·rif′ər·əs) adj. Yielding iron, as rocks.

Fer·ris wheel (fer′is) A giant, vertical, power-driven wheel that revolves on a stationary axle and bears swinging observation cars for passengers. Also ferris wheel. [after G. W. G. Ferris, 1859–96, U.S. engineer] fer·rite (fer′īt) n. 1 Geol. Indeterminable reddish decomposition products in altered igneous rocks, presumably containing iron. 2 Chem. Any compound, such as franklinite (zinc ferrite), considered as a derivative of the ferric hydroxide, $Fe(OH)_3$. 3 Metall. The pure metallic constituent in iron and steel. [<L ferrum iron + -ITE[1]]

Fer·ro (fer′rō) A former name for HIERRO.

ferro- combining form 1 Derived from, containing, or alloyed with iron: ferromanganese. 2 Chem. Containing iron in the ferrous condition: ferrocyanide. [<L ferrum iron] fer·ro·al·loy (fer′ō·al′oi, -ə·loi′) n. Metall. An alloy of iron with certain other metals used in the making of special steels, as nickel, manganese, chromium, etc.

fer·ro·cal·cite (fer′ō·kal′sīt) n. A variety of calcite containing ferrous carbonate.

fer·ro·chrome (fer′ō·krōm′) n. Metall. An alloy of iron and chromium: used in the production of especially hard steel. Also fer′ro·chro′mi·um.

fer·ro·con·crete (fer′ō·kon′krēt, -kon·krēt′) n. Concrete containing metal bars or rods disposed through the mass in such a way as to increase its tensile strength and durability: also called reinforced concrete.

fer·ro·cy·an·ic (fer′ō·sī·an′ik) adj. Chem. Designating a compound obtained by the treatment of ferrocyanide with acid: hydroferrocyanic acid, $H_4Fe(CN)_6$.

fer·ro·cy·a·nide (fer′ō·sī′ə·nīd, -nid) n. Chem. A compound containing the tetravalent radical $Fe(CN)_6$: potassium ferrocyanide, $K_4Fe(CN)_6$.

Fer·rol (fer·rōl′) See EL FERROL DEL CAUDILLO.

fer·ro·mag·ne·sian (fer′ō·mag·nē′shən) adj. Geol. Relating to rocks rich in iron and magnesium, as pyroxene.

fer·ro·mag·net·ic (fer′ō·mag·net′ik) adj. Physics 1 Acting in a magnetic field as or like iron; also, extremely magnetic. 2 Formerly, paramagnetic. — fer′ro·mag′ne·tism n.

fer·ro·man·ga·nese (fer′ō·mang′gə·nēs, -nēz) n. An alloy of iron, containing 50 percent or more of manganese and being rich in carbon: used in making tough steel.

fer·ro·mo·lyb·de·num (fer′ō·mə·lib′də·nəm) n. An alloy of iron and molybdenum: used in the manufacture of a special steel.

fer·ro·nick·el (fer′ō·nik′əl) n. An alloy of iron containing at least 25 percent of nickel and practically free from carbon.

fer·ro·sil·i·con (fer′ō·sil′ə·kən) n. An alloy of silicon and iron added to iron when molten, to increase the proportion of silicon.

fer·ro·tung·sten (fer′ō·tung′stən) n. An alloy of iron and tungsten: used in the manufacture of high-speed tool steel.

fer·ro·type (fer′ō·tīp′) n. A tintype.

fer·rous (fer′əs) adj. Chem. Of or pertaining to bivalent iron, where its combining value is lowest: ferrous chloride, $FeCl_2$; also spelled ferreous. [<L ferrum iron + -OUS] ferrous carbonate A compound, $FeCO_3$, precipitated as a white solid, uniting readily with the free oxygen of the air; also found as a mineral, which is an important iron ore.

ferrous sulfate A compound, $FeSO_4·H_2O$, which unites with free oxygen to form ferric sulfate. See COPPERAS.

ferrous sulfide A compound, FeS, formed either as a black solid precipitated by the action of an iron salt solution with an alkaline sulfide, or as a brittle solid from the union of sulfur and iron under heat; a source of hydrogen sulfide.

fer·ro·va·na·di·um (fer′ō·və·nā′dē·əm) n. An alloy of iron and vanadium: used in the manufacture of a special steel.

fer·ru·gi·nous (fə·rōō′jə·nəs) adj. 1 Of or like iron. 2 Rust-colored. [<L ferruginus < ferrugo, -inis, iron rust < ferrum iron] ferruginous thrush The brown thrasher.

fer·rule (fer′əl, -ōōl, -ōōl) n. 1 A metal ring or cap, as on the end of a cane or around the handle of a tool. 2 A bushing or thimble. 3 The frame of a slate. 4 A ferule. — v.t. ·ruled, ·rul·ing To furnish with a ferrule. [<OF fin perfected <LL finus, a back formation <L finire complete <finis end] — fine′ly adv.

Synonyms (adj.): beautiful, clarified, clear, comminuted, dainty, delicate, elegant, excellent, exquisite, gauzy, handsome, keen, minute, nice, polished, pure, refined, sensitive, sharp, slender, slight, small, smooth, splendid, subtile, subtle, tenuous, thin. Fine denotes that which has been brought to a full end, finished, consummated. From this root-sense many derived meanings branch out, causing words quite remote from each other to be synonyms of fine. That which is truly finished is excellent of its kind, and beautiful, if a thing that admits of beauty; as a fine house, fine trees, a fine woman, a fine morning. If it is a thing that admits of the removal of impurities, it is not finished till these are removed, and hence fine signifies clarified, clear, pure, refined; as, fine gold. That which is finished is apt to be polished, smooth to the touch, minutely exact in outline; hence fine comes to be a synonym for all words like dainty, delicate, exquisite; as, fine manners, a fine touch, fine perceptions. As that which is delicate is apt to be small, by an easy extension of meaning fine becomes a synonym for slender, slight, minute, comminuted; as, a fine thread, fine sand; or for filmy, tenuous, thin; as, a fine lace, fine wire; and as a thin edge is keen and sharp, fine becomes also a synonym for these words; as, a fine point, a fine edge. Compare BEAUTIFUL, EXCELLENT, MINUTE, TASTEFUL. Antonyms: big, blunt, clumsy, coarse, great, heavy, huge, immense, large, rude, stout, thick.

flu·o·resce (flōō′ə·res′) v.i. ·resced, ·resc·ing To become fluorescent; exhibit fluorescence. [Back formation < FLUORESCENCE] flu·o·res·ce·in (flōō′ə·res′ē·in) n. Chem. A dark-red crystalline compound, $C_{20}H_{12}O_5$, obtained by heating phthalic anhydride, and subsequent separation: used in medicine and in the making of dyestuffs. Also flu′o·res′ce·ine (-ēn). flu·o·res·cence (flōō′ə·res′əns) n. Physics 1 The property of certain substances to absorb radiation of a particular wavelength and to re-emit it as light of a different, usually greater, wavelength; the emitted radiation persists only as long as the stimulus is active: distinguished from phosphorescence. 2 The light so produced. [< FLUOR(SPAR); coined on analogy with OPALESCENCE] flu·o·res·cent (flōō′ə·res′ənt) adj. Having or exhibiting fluorescence.
fluorescent lamp An electric-discharge lamp, usually tubular in shape, containing a metallic vapor which becomes luminous on the passing of the current and energizes a layer of fluorescent material coating the tube.
fluorescent screen A surface of glass coated with a fluorescent material, as platinocyanide; it fluoresces on exposure to electron bombardment and is used in cathode-ray vacuum tubes.
flu·or·ic (flōō·ôr′ik, -or′-) adj. Pertaining to, derived from, or containing fluorine or fluorite.
fluor·i·date (flōōr′ə·dāt, flōō′ə·ri·dāt) v.t. ·dat·ed, ·dat·ing To add sodium fluoride to (drinking water), especially as a means of preventing tooth decay. —fluor′i·da′tion n.
flu·o·ride (flōō′ə·rīd, -rid) n. Chem. A binary compound of fluorine and another element. Also flu′o·rid (-rid).
fluor·i·dize (flōōr′ə·dīz, flōō′ə·ri·dīz) v.t. ·dized, ·diz·ing To treat (teeth) with a fluoride, especially as a preventive of tooth decay. — fluor′i·di·za′tion n.
flu·o·rim·e·ter (flōō′ə·rim′ə·tər) n. Physics An absorbing screen used to measure the intensity of fluorescence from different sources, as X-rays, radium, etc.
flu·o·ri·na·tion (flōō′ər·i·nā′shən, flōōr′ə–) n. The act or process of introducing fluorine into an organic compound.
flu·o·rine (flōō′ə·rēn, -rin) n. A pale yellow, toxic, corrosive gaseous element (symbol F, atomic number 9), the most electronegative and reactive of all elements. See PERIODIC TABLE.

flu·o·rite (flo͞o′ə·rīt) n. A cleavable, isometric, variously colored calcium fluoride, CaF_2: used as a flux in making steel and glass: also called fluor, fluorspar.

fluoro- combining form 1 Chem. Indicating the presence of fluorine in a compound. 2 Fluorescence: fluoroscope: also, before vowels, fluor-, as in fluoride.

flu·o·ro·car·bon (flo͞o′ə·rō·kär′bən) n. Chem. Any of a group of very stable compounds in which hydrogen has been replaced by fluorine: used as solvents, lubricants, and insulators.

flu·or·o·chem·i·cal (flo͞o′ə·rō·kem′ə·kəl) n. Any of various chemicals containing fluorine, as the fluorocarbons.

flu·or·om·e·try (flo͞o′ə·rom′ə·trē) n. The measurement of the color and intensity of fluorescence.

fluor·o·scope (flo͝or′ə·sko͞p, flo͞o′ər·ə-) n. A device for observing, by means of some fluorescent substance, the shadows of objects enclosed in media opaque to ordinary light, but transparent to X-rays. —fluor′o·scop′ic (-skop′ik) adj.

fluor·os·co·py (flo͝or·os′kə·pē, flo͞o′ə·ros′-) n. Examination conducted by means of a fluoroscope.

flu·or·o·sis (flo͞o′ə·rō′sis, flo͞o·rō′-) n. Pathol. Chronic poisoning with fluorine.

flu·or·spar (flo͞o′ər·spär′, flo͞o′ər-) n. Fluorite.

flu·o·sil·i·cate (flo͞o′ə·sil′ə·kāt, -kit) n. Chem. A salt of silicic acid.

flu·o·si·lic·ic (flo͞o′ə·sə·lis′ik) adj. 1 Of, pertaining to, or containing fluorine and silicon. 2 Designating a colorless suffocating gaseous compound, fluosilicic acid, H_2SiF_6, formed by the action of hydrofluoric acid on silica.

flur·ry (flûr′ē) v. ·ried, ·ry·ing v.t. To bewilder or confuse; agitate; fluster. —v.i. To move in a flurry. [< n.] —n. pl. flur·ries 1 A sudden commotion; nervous agitation. 2 Flutter; hurry. 3 A light gust of wind. 4 A light snowfall or rain. 5 The spasmodic contortions of a dying whale. See synonyms under TUMULT. [Blend of FLUTTER and HURRY] flush[1] (flush) v.i. 1 To become red in the face or overspread with color; redden; blush. 2 To flow and spread suddenly; rush: The blood flushes in his veins. 3 To be washed out or cleansed by a sudden flow of water. —v.t. 4 To cause to color, as with a rush of blood; make red or florid. 5 To encourage; excite: flushed with victory. 6 To wash out by a flow of water, as a sewer or an obstacle. —n. 1 A heightened color; warm glow; blush. 2 Sudden elation or excitement. 3 A sudden blossoming out; growth; bloom. 4 A sudden gush or flow of water. —adj. 1 Full of life; vigorous. 2 Powerful and direct, as a blow. —adv. In a direct manner; squarely; straight. [? < FLUSH[4]: infl. in meaning by flash, flow, bluish, etc.] —flush′er n.

flush[2] (flush) adj. 1 Having the surfaces in the same plane; level. 2 Printing Set even with the left edge of the type page; having no indention. 3 Naut. Of or pertaining to a ship with an upper deck extending in one level from stern to stern. 4 Full; copious. 5 Well supplied with money; spending freely. —v.t. To make level or straight. —n. 1 A level or unbroken surface. 2 Abundance. —adv. 1 With level, unbroken surface or form. 2 Printing Without indention; straight. [? < FLUSH[1]] flush[3] (flush) n. In some card games, a hand of cards all of one color; specifically, in poker, of one suit. —royal flush A hand of cards containing the ace, king, queen, jack, and ten of one suit. —straight flush A poker hand having all the cards of the same suit and in sequence. [Cf. F flux, flus < L fluxus A flow] flush[4] (flush) v.t. & v.i. To drive or to be startled from cover; start up, as birds. —n. The act of startling a bird; also a bird or birds startled from cover. [ME flusschen; origin uncertain] flush·board (flush′bôrd′, -bōrd′) n. A flashboard.

Flush·ing (flush′ing) 1 A port in SW Netherlands, on the English Channel: Dutch Vlissingen. 2 A section of the Borough of Queens, New York City, including Flushing Meadow, site of the 1939–40 World's Fair and headquarters of the United Nations, 1946–51.

flus·ter (flus′tər) v.t. & v.i. To make or become confused, agitated, or befuddled. —n. Confusion of mind; flurry; intoxication. [Cf. Icel. flaustr hurry] flus·trate (flus′trāt) v.t. ·trat·ed, ·trat·ing To fluster; befuddle. Also flus′ter·ate. [< FLUSTER + -ATE[1]] —flus′ter·a′tion, flus·tra′tion n.

flute (flo͞ot) n. 1 A tubular wind instrument of small diameter with holes along the side. 2 A flute stop in an organ; flue. 3 Archit. A groove, usually of semicircular section, as in a column. 4 A corrugation; crimping. 5 A tall, slender wineglass. —v. flut·ed, flut·ing. —v.i. 1 To play on a flute. 2 To produce a flutelike sound. —v.t. 3 To sing or utter with flutelike tones. 4 To make flutes in, as a column. [< OF flaüte] —flut′y adj.

FLUTE

flut·ed (flo͞o′tid) adj. 1 Having parallel grooves or flutes. 2 Having the tone of a flute.

flut·er (flo͞o′tər) n. 1 A flutist. 2 One who or that which makes fluted work.

flut·ing (flo͞o′ting) n. 1 A flute or groove. 2 Flutes or grooves collectively. 3 The act of making a flute, as by carving a column: the reverse of reeding. 4 A crimp, as in the ruffle of a woman's dress.

flut·ist (flo͞o′tist) n. A flute-player: also called flautist.

flut·ter (flut′ər) v.i. 1 To wave or flap rapidly and irregularly, as in the wind. 2 To flap the wings rapidly, in or as in erratic flight. 3 To move or proceed with irregular motion: to flutter to the ground. 4 To move about lightly and quickly; flit. 5 To be excited or nervous, as with hope, fear, or expectation. —v.t. 6 To cause to flutter. 7 To excite; fluster. See synonyms under SHAKE. —n. 1 The act of vibrating or quivering. 2 Agitation; confused or tumultous emotion. 3 An up-and-down motion of the feet used in various swimming strokes, especially the crawl. 4 Aeron. A periodic oscillation set up in any part of an airplane by mechanical disturbances and maintained by inertia, structural characteristics, etc. 5 Tremololike pulsations in the sound track of a motion picture, due to rapid fluctuations in motor speed. 6 Pathol. An abnormally rapid but rhythmical contraction of the atria of the heart; also auricular flutter. [OE flotorian] —flut′ter·er n. —flut′ter·y adj.

flutter kick In swimming, a kick, usually performed with the crawl stroke, in which the legs are kept almost straight while being moved up and down rapidly.

flu·vi·al (flo͞o′vē·əl) adj. 1 Of, pertaining to or formed by a river. 2 Existing in a river. Also flu·vi·at·ic (flo͞o′vē·at′ik), flu·vi·a·tile (flo͞o′vē·ə·til). [< L fluvialis < fluvius river] fluvio- combining form River: fluviograph. [< L fluvius a river] flu·vi·o·graph (flo͞o′vē·ə·graf′, -gräf′) n. A mechanical contrivance for measuring the rise and fall of a river.

flu·vi·o·ma·rine (flo͞o′vē·ō′mə·rēn′) adj. Formed by or pertaining to the joint action of the sea and flowing streams, as delta deposits.

flux (fluks) n. 1 A continuous flowing or discharge: a thermal or electrical flux. 2 The act or process of melting. 3 Pathol. A morbid discharge of fluid matter from the body. 4 Metall. A substance that promotes the fusing of minerals or metals, as borax. 5 Any readily fusible glass or enamel used as a base or ground in ceramic work. 6 Physics The rate of flow or transfer of water, heat, electricity, etc. 7 A state of constant movement: the flux of the tide. See synonyms under STREAM. —bloody flux Dysentery. —v.t. 1 To make fluid; melt; fuse. 2 To treat, as metal, with a flux. 3 Obs. To purge. —v.i. 4 Obs. To flow; move. [< F < L fluxus < fluere flow] —flux·a′tion n.

flux density Physics The induction of lines of electrical or magnetic force per unit section.

flux·ion (fluk′shən) n. 1 The act of flowing or melting; that which flows or melts; continuous change. 2 Math. Obs. The rate of variation of a changing quantity; also, a differential. 3 Pathol. An abnormal or excessive flow of body fluids.

flux·ion·al (fluk′shən·əl) adj. 1 Obs. Of or pertaining to mathematical fluxions. 2 Obs. Of a nature to flow. Also flux′ion·ar′y. —flux′·ion·al·ly adv.

fly[1] (flī) v. flew or flied (def. 7), flown, fly·ing v.i. 1 To move through the air by using wings, as a bird. 2 To move through the air in an aircraft; travel by aircraft. 3 To move through the air with speed, as an arrow or bullet. 4 To wave or move in the air, as a flag. 5 To pass swiftly: The years flew by. 6 To move swiftly or with violence: The door flew open. 7 In baseball, to bat a fly. 8 To take flight; flee. 9 In hawking, to hunt with or as with a hawk. —v.t. 10 To cause to wave or float in the air. 11 To operate (an aircraft). 12 To pass over in an aircraft: to fly the Atlantic. 13 To transport by aircraft. 14 To flee from. 15 In hawking, to hunt with a hawk. —to fly at To attack. —to fly in the face of To defy openly. —to fly out In baseball, to be retired by batting a ball which is caught by an opposing player before it touches the ground. —n. pl. flies. 1 An object or device that moves or swings rapidly through the air, or has some relation to such motion. 2 A speed-regulating device, as of vanes upon a rotating shaft, used in music boxes, in the striking part of clocks. 3 Printing A long-fingered frame oscillating quickly upon a horizontal axis, taking the sheets from the tapes or cylinder of a printing press and delivering them flat upon a pile. 4 A knitting-machine latch. 5 The length of a flag measured from the staff to its farthest edge, as distinguished from the hoist. 6 That part of a flag farthest from the staff, or beyond the canton. 7 The revolving part of a vane that shows the direction of the wind. 8 Mech. a A flywheel, a weighted arm, or other mechanical device involving the flywheel principle. b The heavily weighted lever which enables a fly press to acquire momentum. c A fly press. 9 A strip or lap on a garment, to cover the buttons or other fasteners; hence, something used to cover or connect; a flap, as of a bootee. 10 An upper covering to a ridge-pole tent; also, the flap at the entrance of a tent. 11 The condition or movement of a ball when sent flying through the air as in baseball; also, the ball thus flying. 12 Waste cotton. 13 The act or state of flying; flight. 14 A public carriage; also, a delivery wagon. 15 In a theater, the space above the stage and behind the proscenium containing the borders, the mechanism for handling and setting the scenery, the overhead lights, etc. —on the fly While flying; while in the air; in haste. [OE flēogan]

Synonyms (verb): flee, flit, haste, hasten, run, soar, speed. See ESCAPE.

fly[2] (flī) n. pl. flies 1 One of various small dipterous insects (family Muscidae), especially the common housefly (Musca domestica). 2 Any of various other flying insects not of the family Muscidae: the Spanish fly, or the mayfly. 3 A fish hook concealed by feathers, etc., to imitate some insect. 4 pl. flys A light carriage. [OE flȳge] fly[3] (flī) adj. Slang Sharp; wide-awake.

fly-a·gar·ic (flī′ə·gar′ik, -ag′ə·rik) n. A common species of poisonous mushroom (Amanita muscaria) with a brightly colored pileus. Also fly·am·a·ni·ta (-am′ə·nī′tə).

fly-a·way (flī′ə·wā′) adj. Disposed to flightiness; fluttering; restless; giddy. —n. A person or thing that is flighty, swift, or elusive.

fly·blow (flī′blō′) n. The egg or young larva of a blowfly. —v.t. & v.t. ·blew, ·blown, ·blow·ing 1 To taint (food) with flyblows. 2 To spoil.

fly·blown (flī′blōn′) adj. Tainted with flyblows.

fly·boat (flī′bōt′) n. 1 A large flat-bottomed Dutch coasting boat. 2 A narrow English canal boat. 3 Any very swift vessel. fly book A booklike case for holding artificial flies.

fly-by (flī′bī′) n. pl. ·bys The passage of a spacecraft relatively near a heavenly body, as for obtaining photographs of its surface.

fly-by-night (flī′bī·nīt′) adj. Financially precarious or irresponsible. —n. One who is financially insecure or untrustworthy; one who cheats a creditor by decamping at night.

fly-catch·er (flī′kach′ər) n. Any of a large order of perching birds (Passeriformes) that feed upon insects; especially, the American tyrant flycatcher (family Tyrannidae) and the Old World flycatcher (family Muscicapidae)—least flycatcher A small American flycatcher; the chebec (Empidonax minimus).

fly·er (flī′ər) See FLIER.

fly-fish (flī′fish′) v.i. To fish with artificial flies as bait. —fly′-fish′ing n.

fly-flap-per (flī′flap′ər) n. A device for whisking flies.

fly-frame (flī′frām′) n. Any of several machines used to draw and twist textile fibers preparatory to spinning, as a roving frame.

fly-front (flī′frunt′) adj. Having a fly that covers buttons or a zipper.

fly-ing (flī′ing) adj. 1 Intended or adapted for swift or easy motion, or motion through the air; moving with or as with wings. 2 Moving rapidly or continuously; hurried: ▪ flying bird or trip. 3 Floating or suspended so as to float in the air: a flying banner. 4 Extending or being beyond the ordinary; extra: a flying jib. —n. 1 The act of flight; flight, as of a bird or an aircraft. 2 pl. Loose material, as fibers, floating in the air. — instrument flying Navigation of an aircraft by means of instruments alone: also called blind flying.

flying boat A large seaplane, supported on water by its own hull rather than by floats.

flying bomb See under BOMB.

flying buttress Archit. A rampant arch extending from a wall or pier to a supporting abutment, usually receiving the thrust of another arch on the other side of the wall.

flying cadet An aviation cadet.

flying circus 1 In World War I, a squadron of fighter planes. 2 Aerial acrobatics performed by several planes. 3 The group giving such a performance.

flying colors Outward signs of victory or success: an allusion to passing through combat without striking the colors.

flying column Mil. A body of troops equipped to move swiftly and operate independently of the main force.

flying doctor Austral. A physician serving with the Royal Flying Doctor Service, which since 1928 has been providing medical care in remote inland places.

flying fatigue Aeroneurosis.

flying field Aeron. A field with a graded portion for taking off and landing and an unimproved area for flying operations.

flying fish A fish (family Exocoetidae) of warm and temperate seas, with large pectoral fins that enable it to glide through the air for short distances.

fly-ing-fox (flī′ing-foks′) n. A large fruit-eating bat, especially a genus (Pteropus) of the warmer parts of the Old World, with foxlike snout.

flying frog A ranoid tree frog (Rhacophorus pardalis) of Borneo, having elongated, webbed toes which serve as supports during leaps.

flying gurnard A marine fish (family Dactylopteridae) having very long horizontal pectoral fins divided into a smaller upper and a longer lower or posterior portion and able to flutter for short distances in the air.

flying jib, flying-jib boom See under JIB[1].

flying lemur An insect-eating mammal (genus Cynocephalus) having the fore and hind limbs connected by a fold of skin, by the aid of which it makes flying leaps: native of East Indies: also called colugo.

flying lizard A dragon (def. 6). flying machine 1 An aircraft which is sustained by aerodynamic forces; an airplane. 2 An airship.

fly-ing-mare (flī′ing-mâr′) n. In wrestling, a throw accomplished by seizing an opponent's wrist, turning around and jerking the opponent over one's shoulder.

flying officer An officer who belongs to the crew of an aircraft, as a pilot, navigator, bombardier, or the like.

flying phalanger Any of several arboreal marsupials (genera Acrobates, Petaurus, Schoinobates) of Australia and New Guinea, having folds of skin along the sides that enable them to make long, gliding leaps. Also called glider, gliding possum, possum glider.

flying saucer Any of various oddly shaped objects alleged to have been seen flying at high altitudes; an unidentified flying object (UFO).

flying squirrel A squirrel (genus Glaucomys) having on each side a fold of skin forming a parachute, by the help of which the animal can make long sailing leaps.

FLYING SQUIRREL
(Head and body about 5 inches long; tail, 4 inches) flying start 1 In racing, the passing of the starting post at full speed. 2 Any rapid beginning.

flying trip A quick, hurried trip.

flying wing 1 An airplane without a fuselage. 2 Canadian In football, a player whose position varies behind the line of scrimmage.

fly-leaf (flī′lēf′) n. pl. ·leaves A blank leaf at the beginning or end of a book, pamphlet, or similar printed matter.

fly-net (flī′net′) n. 1 A net worn by horses to keep off flies. 2 Any netting, as in a window, for excluding insects.
